Danny Ozark

When the Phillies named Danny Ozark as their manager back in November of 1972, a lot of people asked, "Danny Who?"

Six seasons later, Danny Ozark is ranked among the most respected and successful managers in baseball. One of Pete Rose's favorite lines when quizzed about his career is, "Check the stats"

Well, in checking Ozark's stats, it's easy to see why he's one of baseball's best managers:

(1) He's the senior manager in the National League, entering his seventh year. Only Earl Weaver, starting his 11th season with Baltimore, has more seniority with one club.

(2) He's the first manager to lead a club to three straight division championships in the National League.

(3) He's won more games the last three years than any other N.L. manager.

(4) He ranks third among all-time Phillies managers in wins. Harry Wright, the Phillies manager way back in 1884 to 1893, won 678 games. Between 1960 and 1968, Gene Mauch chalked up 645 wins. Danny starts 1979 with 529 and will reach 600 this year.

(5) He also ranks third in winning percentage among all Phils managers. Danny's percentage is .544, just .003 behind Bill Shettsline (1898-1902). Pat Moran's .556 (1915-1918) is the leader.

There are all kinds of managers in the game. Some are strategic geniuses, some are low-key staying in the background, some are rah-rah rooters, some are gruff and some seek to get all the attention rather than the players.

Paul Owens said Danny Ozark was of the Walter Alston mold when he announced Danny's appointment, a low-key type of manager.

He's also a players' manager, a guy who gives his players all the credit.

And, when the going gets tough, Danny Ozark, a man with a Purple Heart and five Bronze stars from World War II, is a Rock of Gilbralter.

So, the unknown Danny Ozark has emerged as a premier manager drawing many accolades and deservingly so:

"I think day-in, day-out, Danny's a very sound manager. He's a low-key guy. He's not a Billy Martin. He's not a Gene Mauch type, but I think he has gained prestige in taking as much criticism as he has and showing as little emotion as he has. That's Danny Ozark and I respect him for it," says his boss, Paul Owens.

"Danny Ozark is always putting his players first, an uncomplicated grass-roots baseball man who has had no prodding urge to be anything else. To him, you can forget about the tinsel and fakery of Hollywood that Tommy Lasorda thrives on. You can forget about those who say a manager should be colorful, a delight for the media mob." Hal Bodley, Wilmington News-Journal Sports Editor.

The one thing you come to appreciate about this man; at the time when you feel the panic in the air, he stays calm." Frank Dolson, Philadelphia Inquirer Sports Editor.

"The bottom line for most of the guys is the fact that under Danny we've won a lot of games. That's a helluva job." Greg Luzinski.

Phillies Coaches

Assisting Danny Ozark in running the Phillies is one of the best five-man coaching staffs in the game.

Dean of the staff and one of the senior coaches in the league is third base coach Billy DeMars, also highly respected as a hitting instructor. DeMars is in his 11th year with the Phils.

Handling the first base coaching chores and adding tips from his 2,000-plus games in the majors is the popular Tony Taylor. Danny's No. 1 lieutenant in the dugout is a former defensive whiz at shortstop, Bobby Wine.

Gone are the familiar faces of Ray Rippelmeyer and Carroll Beringer, both retired.

Assuming the pitching coach responsibilities is 42-year-old Herm Starrette, who's had five years in the National League working with Atlanta and San Francisco. Bob Tiefenauer, 49, a professional pitcher for 20 years and the Phillies minor league pitching instructor since 1970, takes over the bullpen chores.

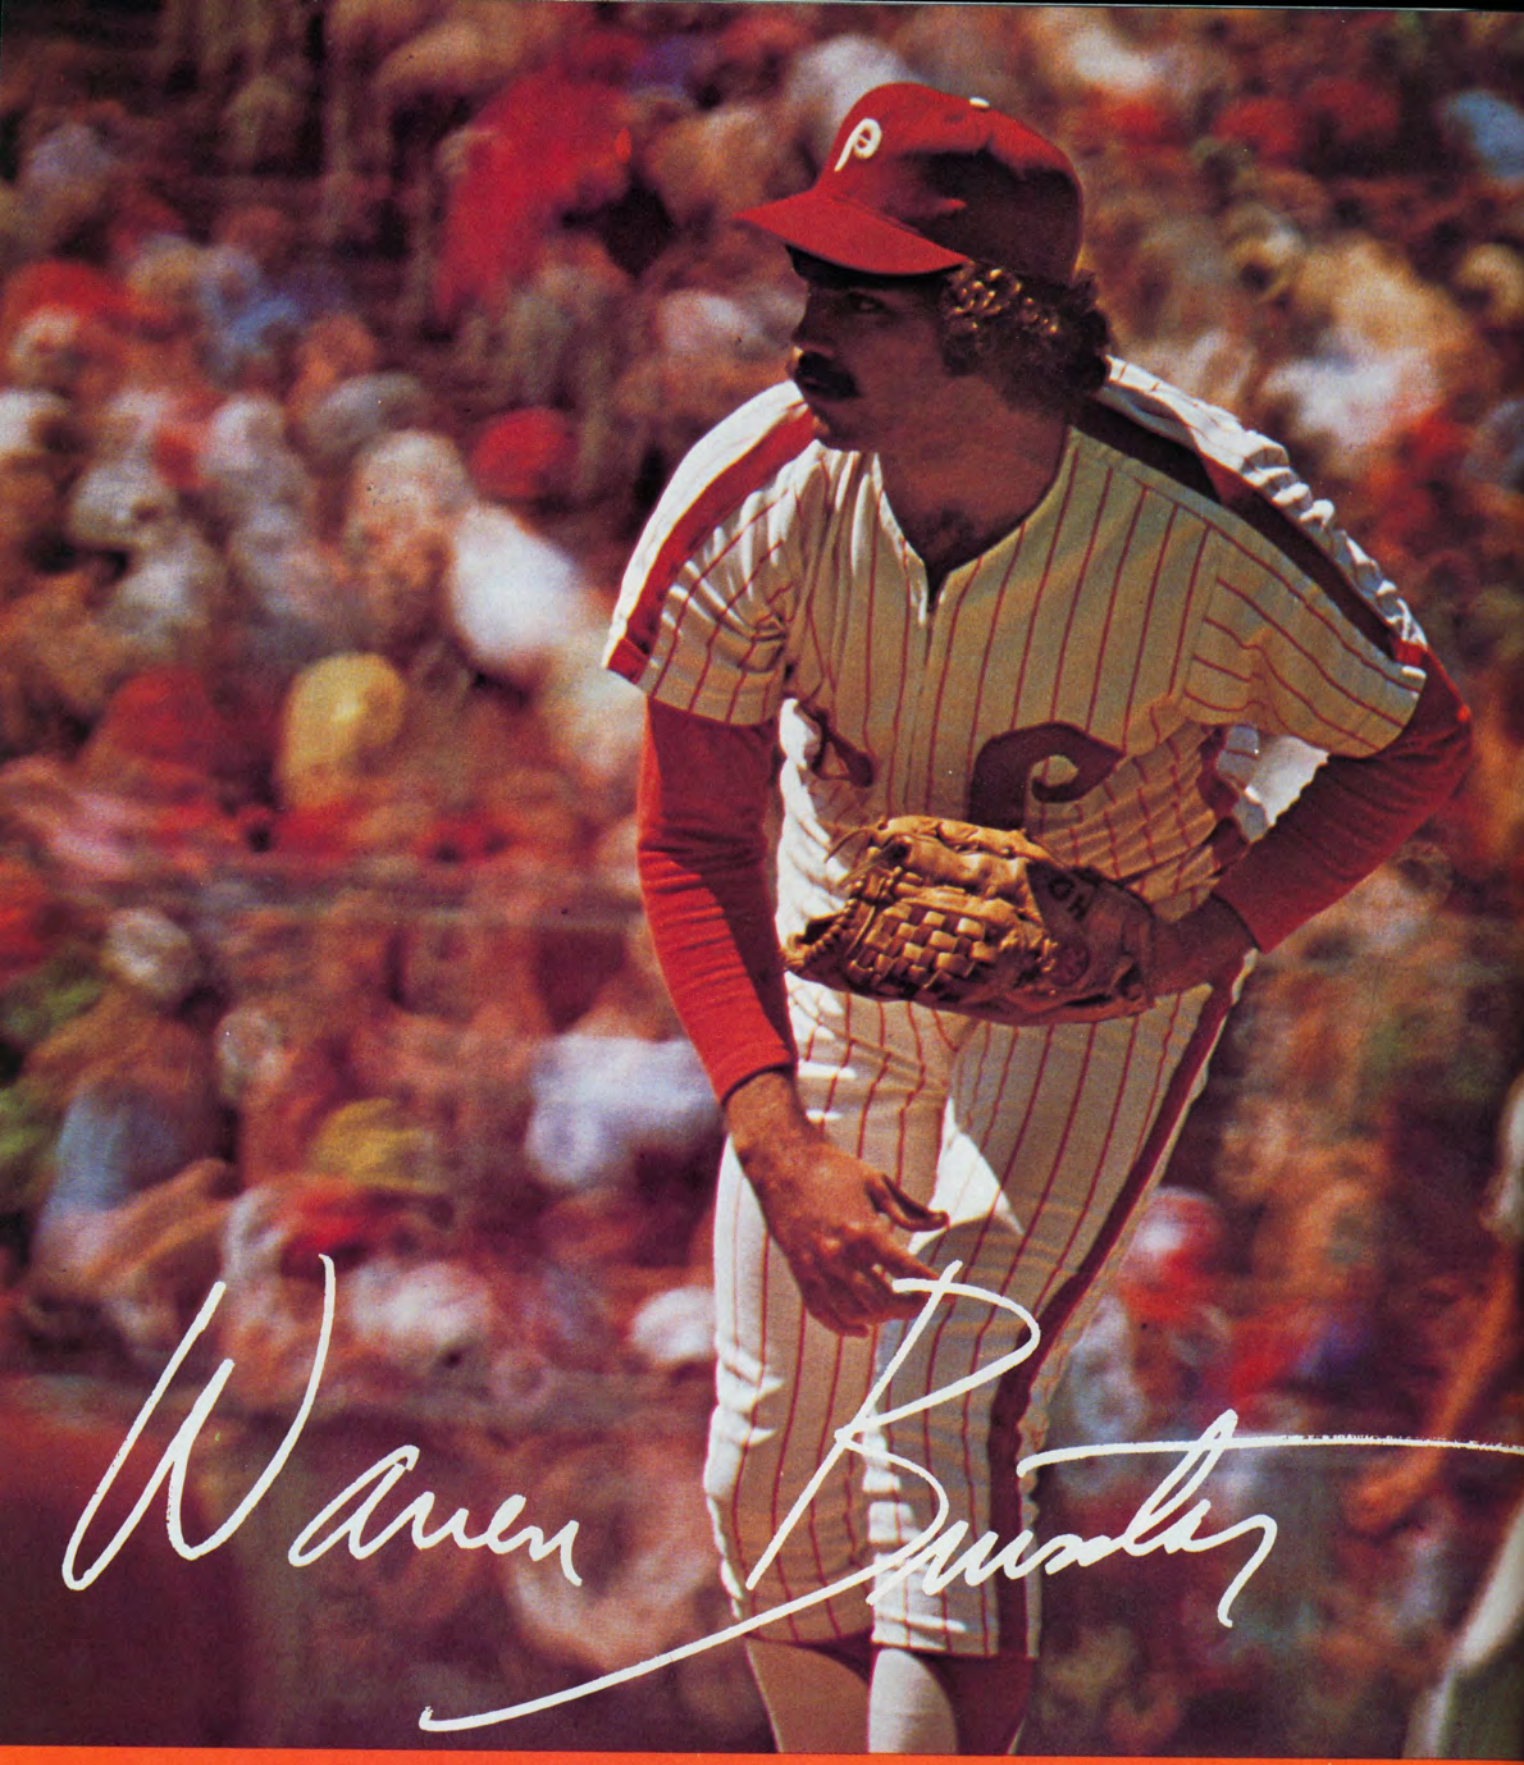
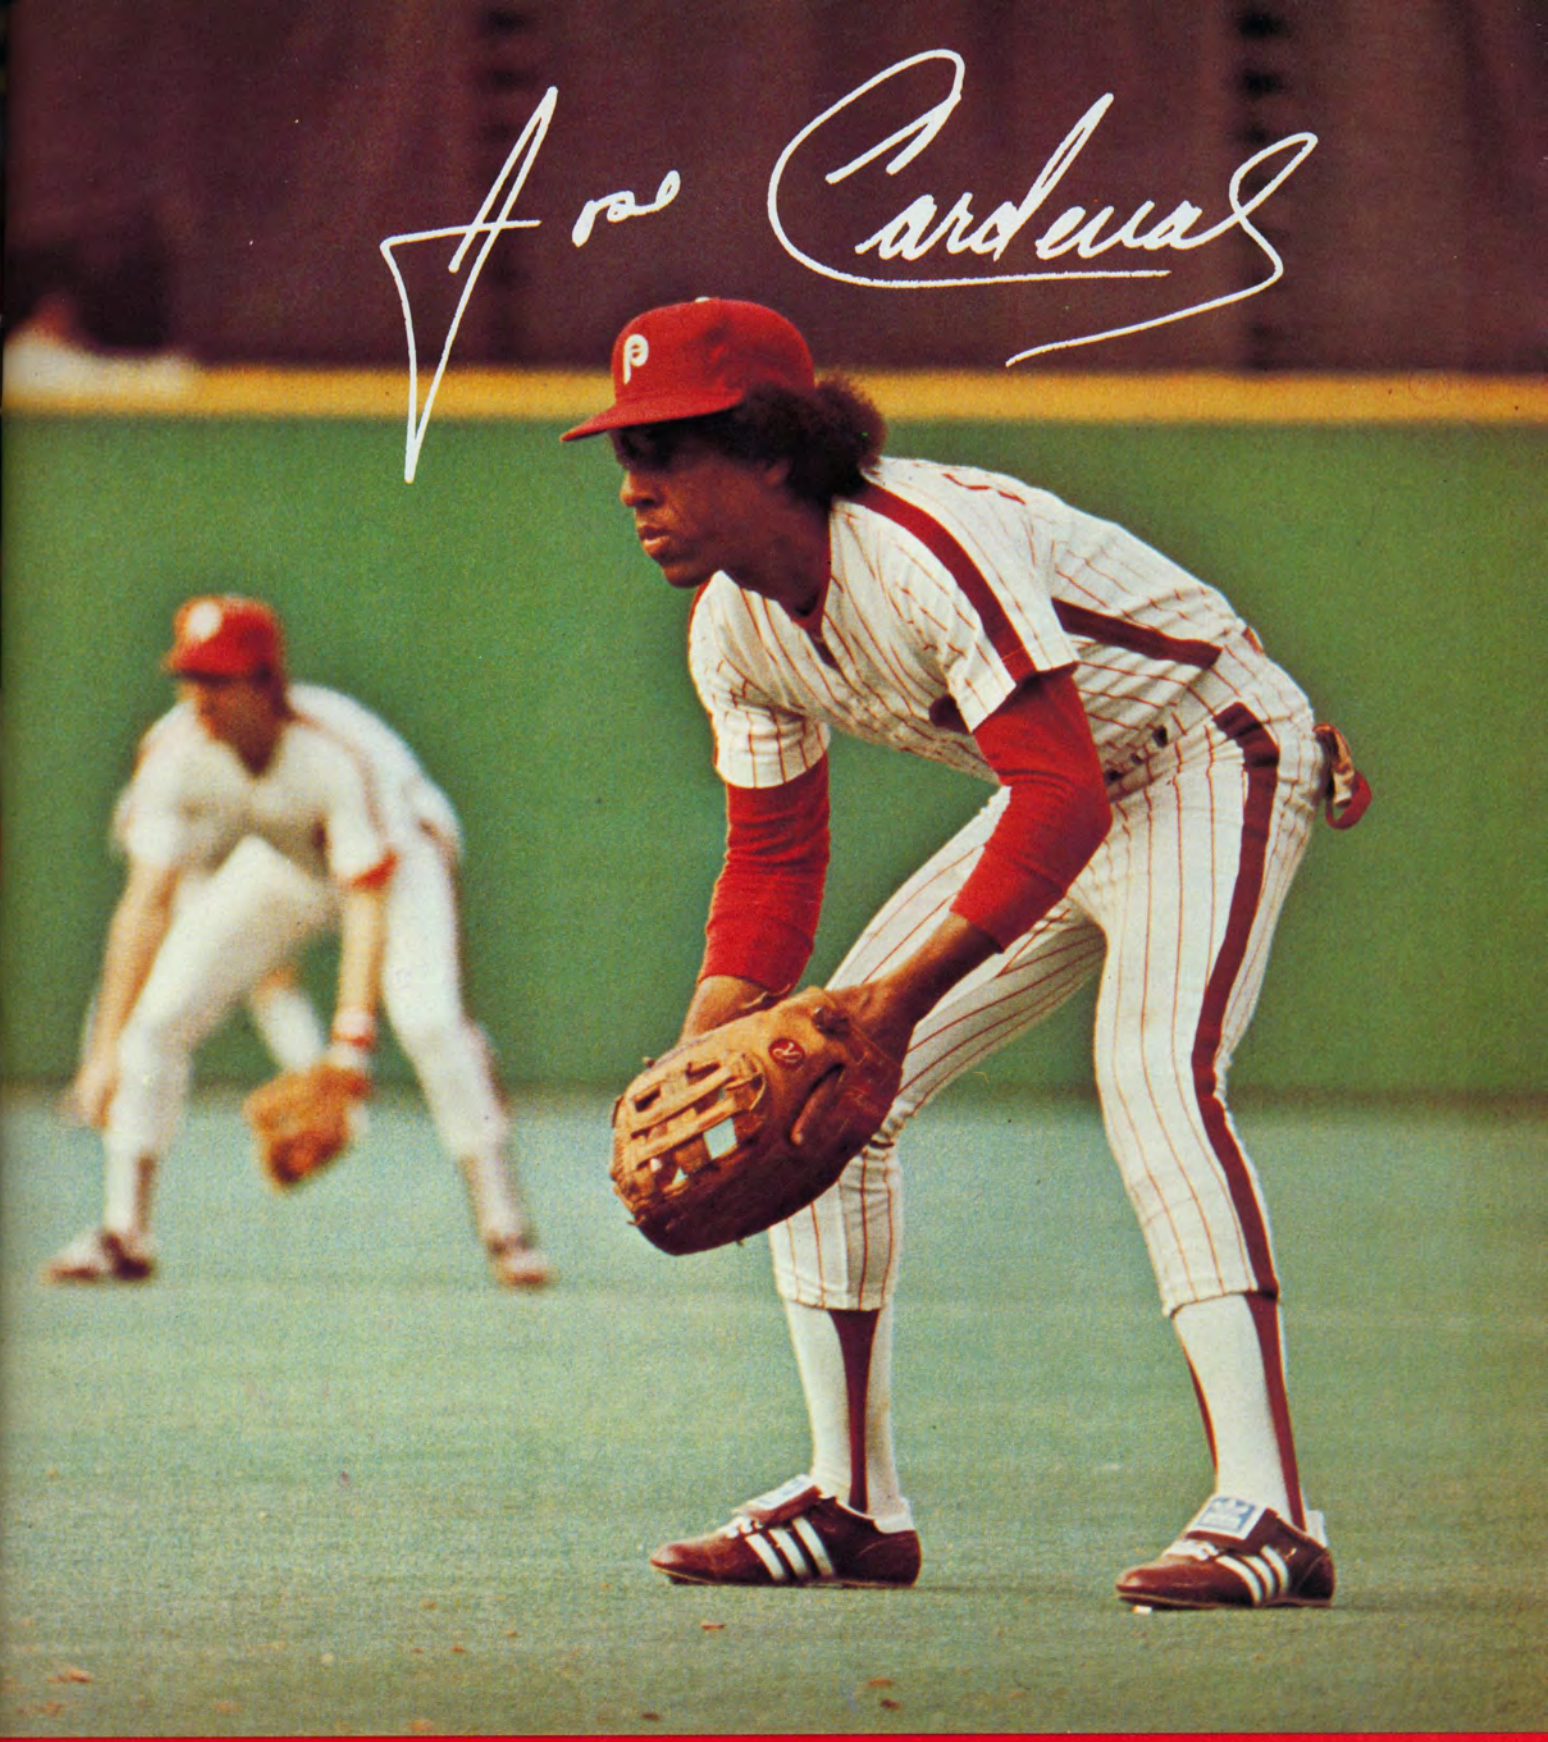
Bob Boone Sometimes a player who keeps a low profile and just goes out and does the job day after day never gets any recognition. Bob Boone fits this description, but lately people have begun to realize how good a player he has become. Over the past two seasons, Boone has been the most consistent catcher in the league both offensively and defensively. He caught most of the 1977 season on one leg as he was forced to undergo post-season knee surgery. Last year he batted .283 with a career high 12 home runs and won his first Gold Glove. He also was selected to the All-Star team for the second time. Bob is an intelligent handler of pitchers who has been a fan favorite in Philadelphia for a number of years and now is getting the national recognition he richly deserves.

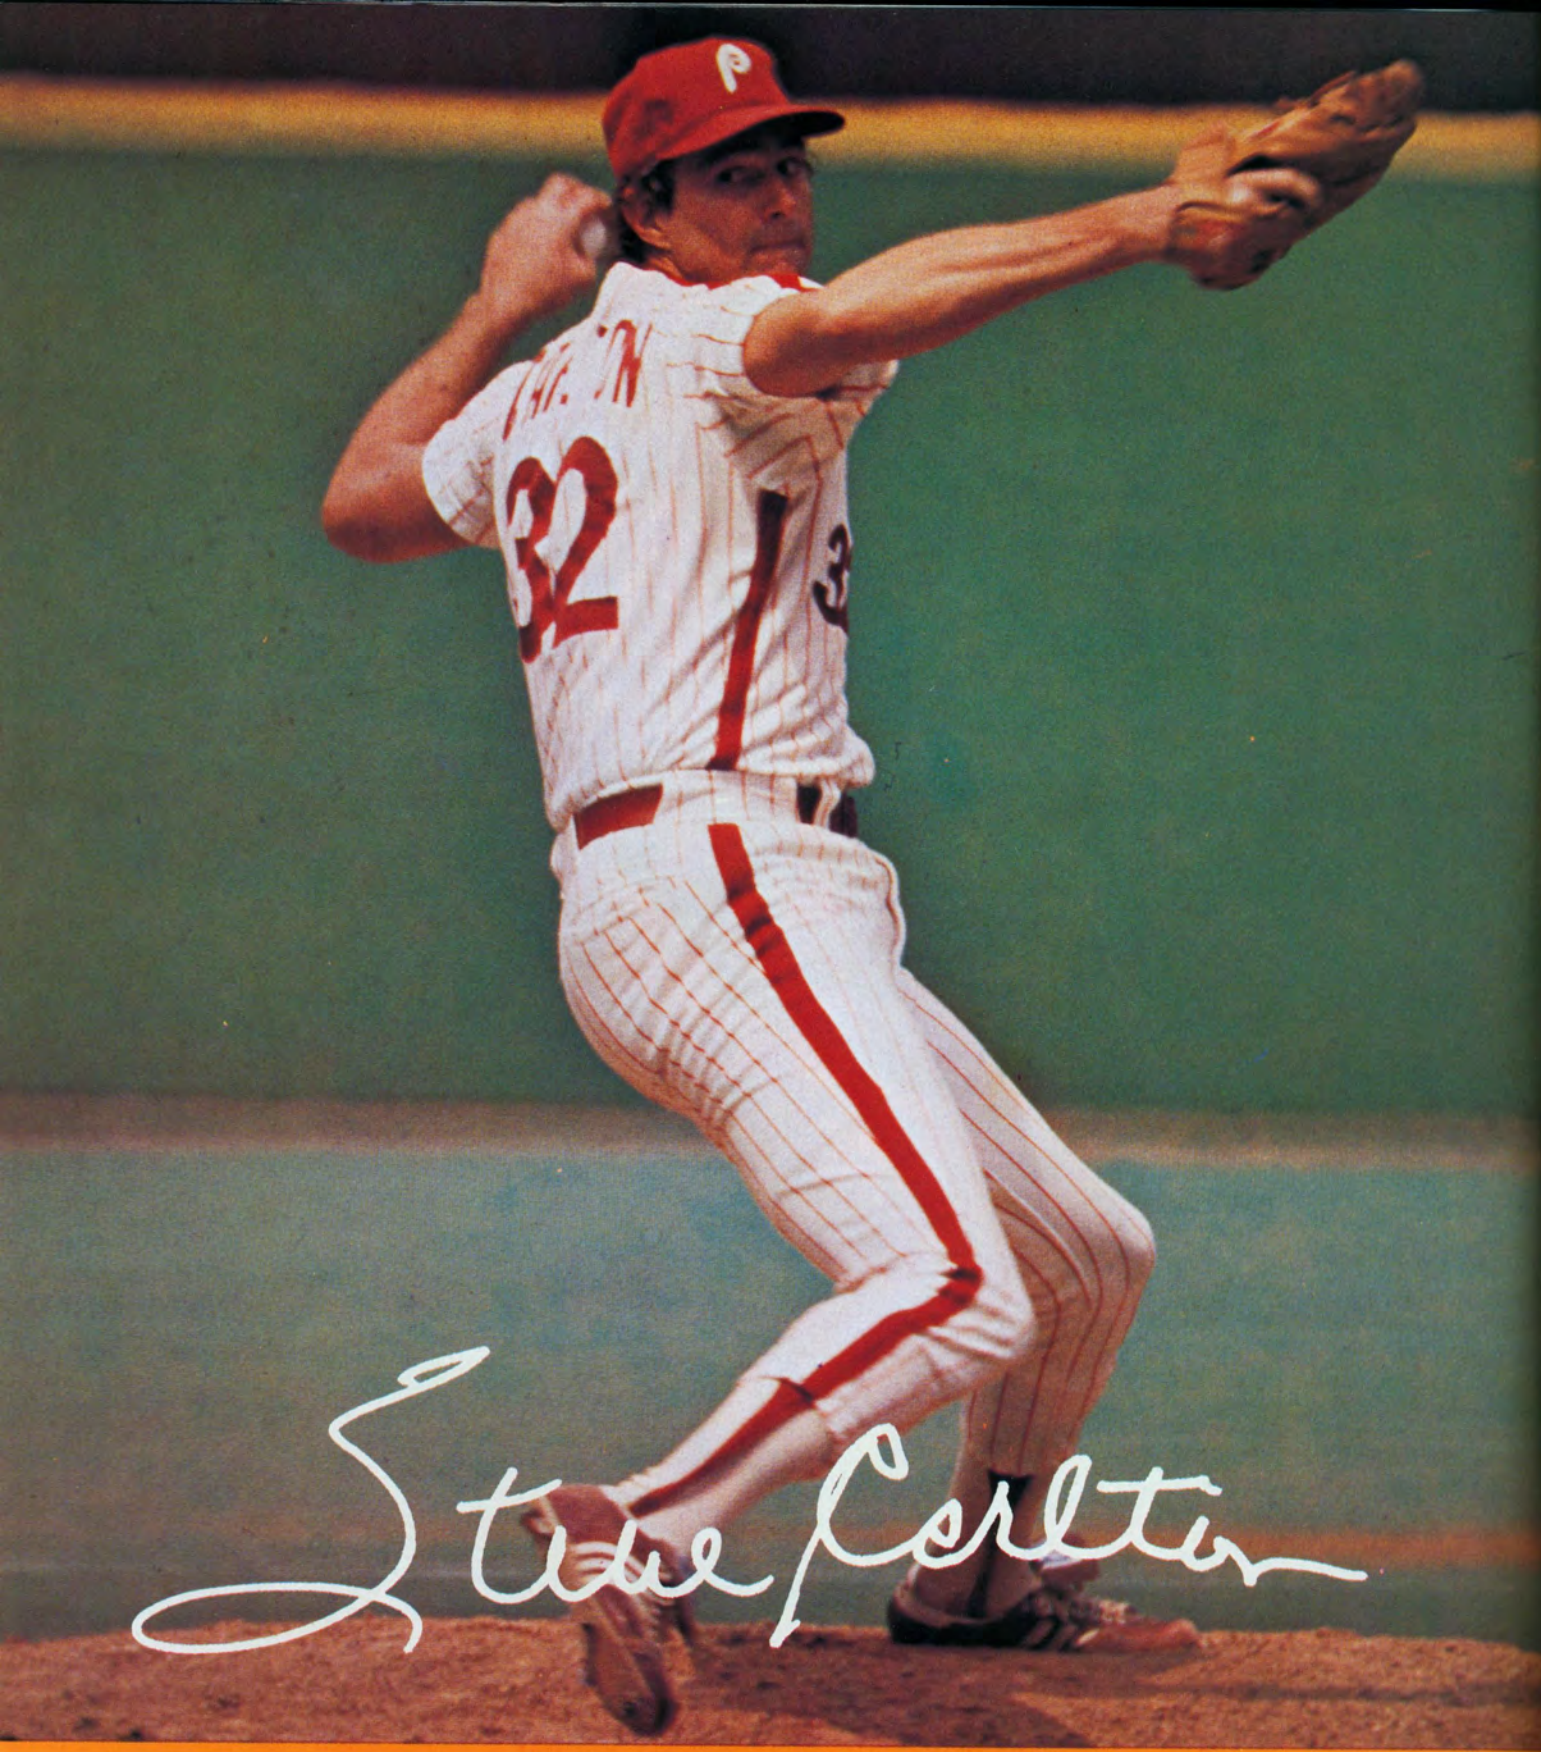
Larry Bowa The off-season normally is a restless time for Larry Bowa. His life revolves around baseball and he never has learned to relax when he doesn't have to go to the ballpark. But this past fall was the worst ever. The Phillies were trying to get his buddy Pete Rose into a Philadelphia uniform and Bowa was as nervous as a bug loose on a disco floor. Constantly on the phone to Rose, Larry kept telling Pete how important he would be to the Phillies. When Rose finally agreed to wear a Phillies uniform, Bowa acted like he had signed the contract instead of his good friend. Coming off his finest overall season in 1978, Larry Bowa always is anxious to start a new baseball season. However with Pete Rose as a teammate in 1979, the season has taken on a whole new dimension for him!



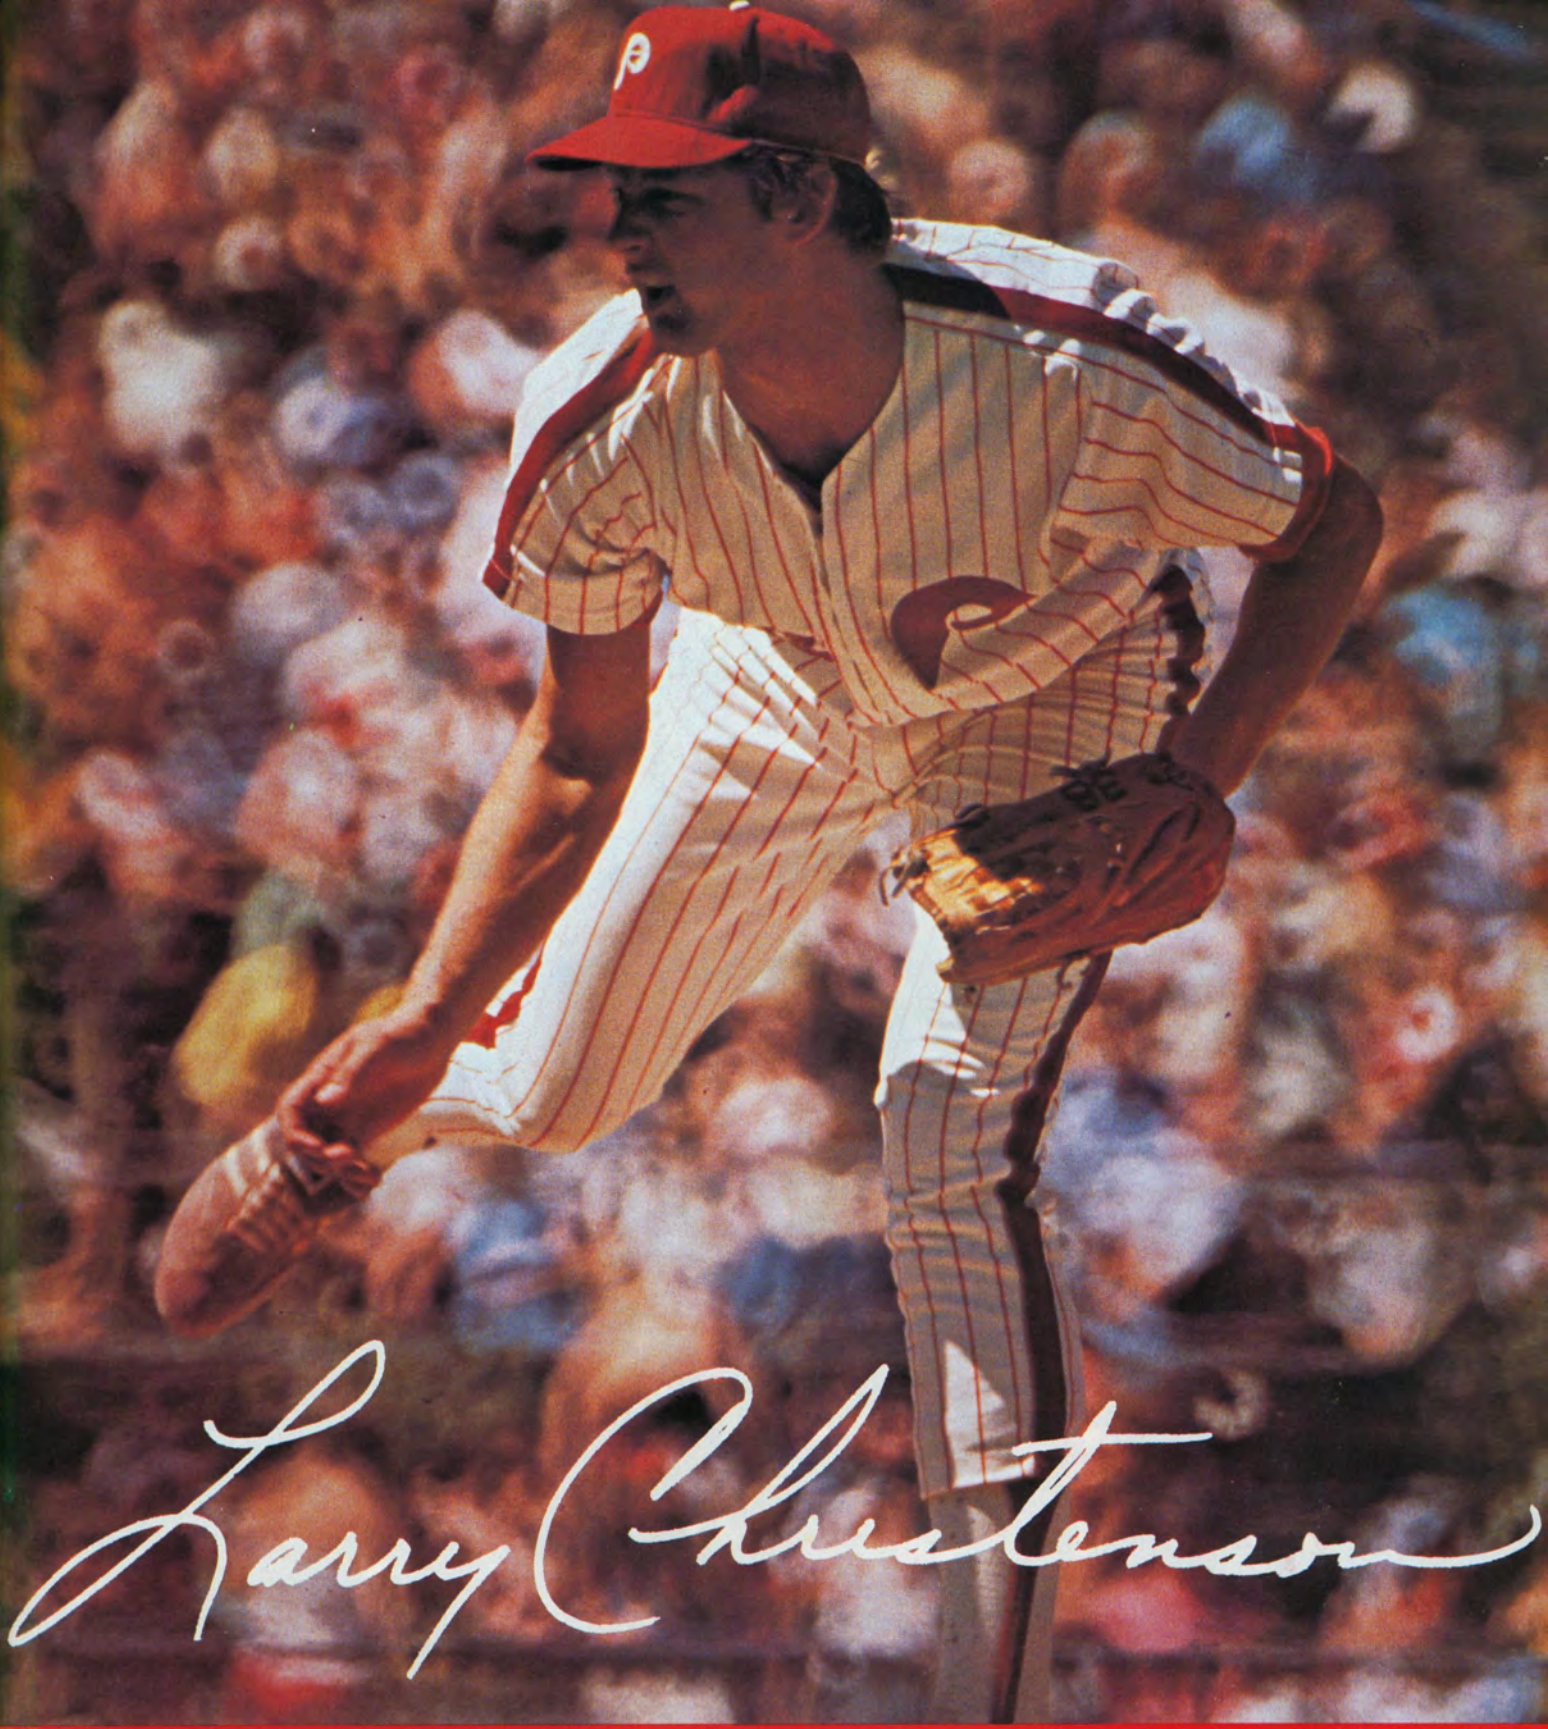
Warren Brusstar Draw up a blueprint for the perfect late-inning relief pitcher and Warren Brusstar probably would fit all the specifications. A wad of chewing tobacco jammed into his cheek and those cold blue eyes give the hitter the impression that the native Californian means business. In just two seasons in the majors, "Brew" has become one of the most widely respected relievers in the game and appears on the verge of stardom. He has the ability to throw strikes in crucial situations and his sinkerball, slider-type of pitching keeps the ball in the ballpark and results in numerous ground balls that have helped bail him and the Phillies out of plenty of trouble.



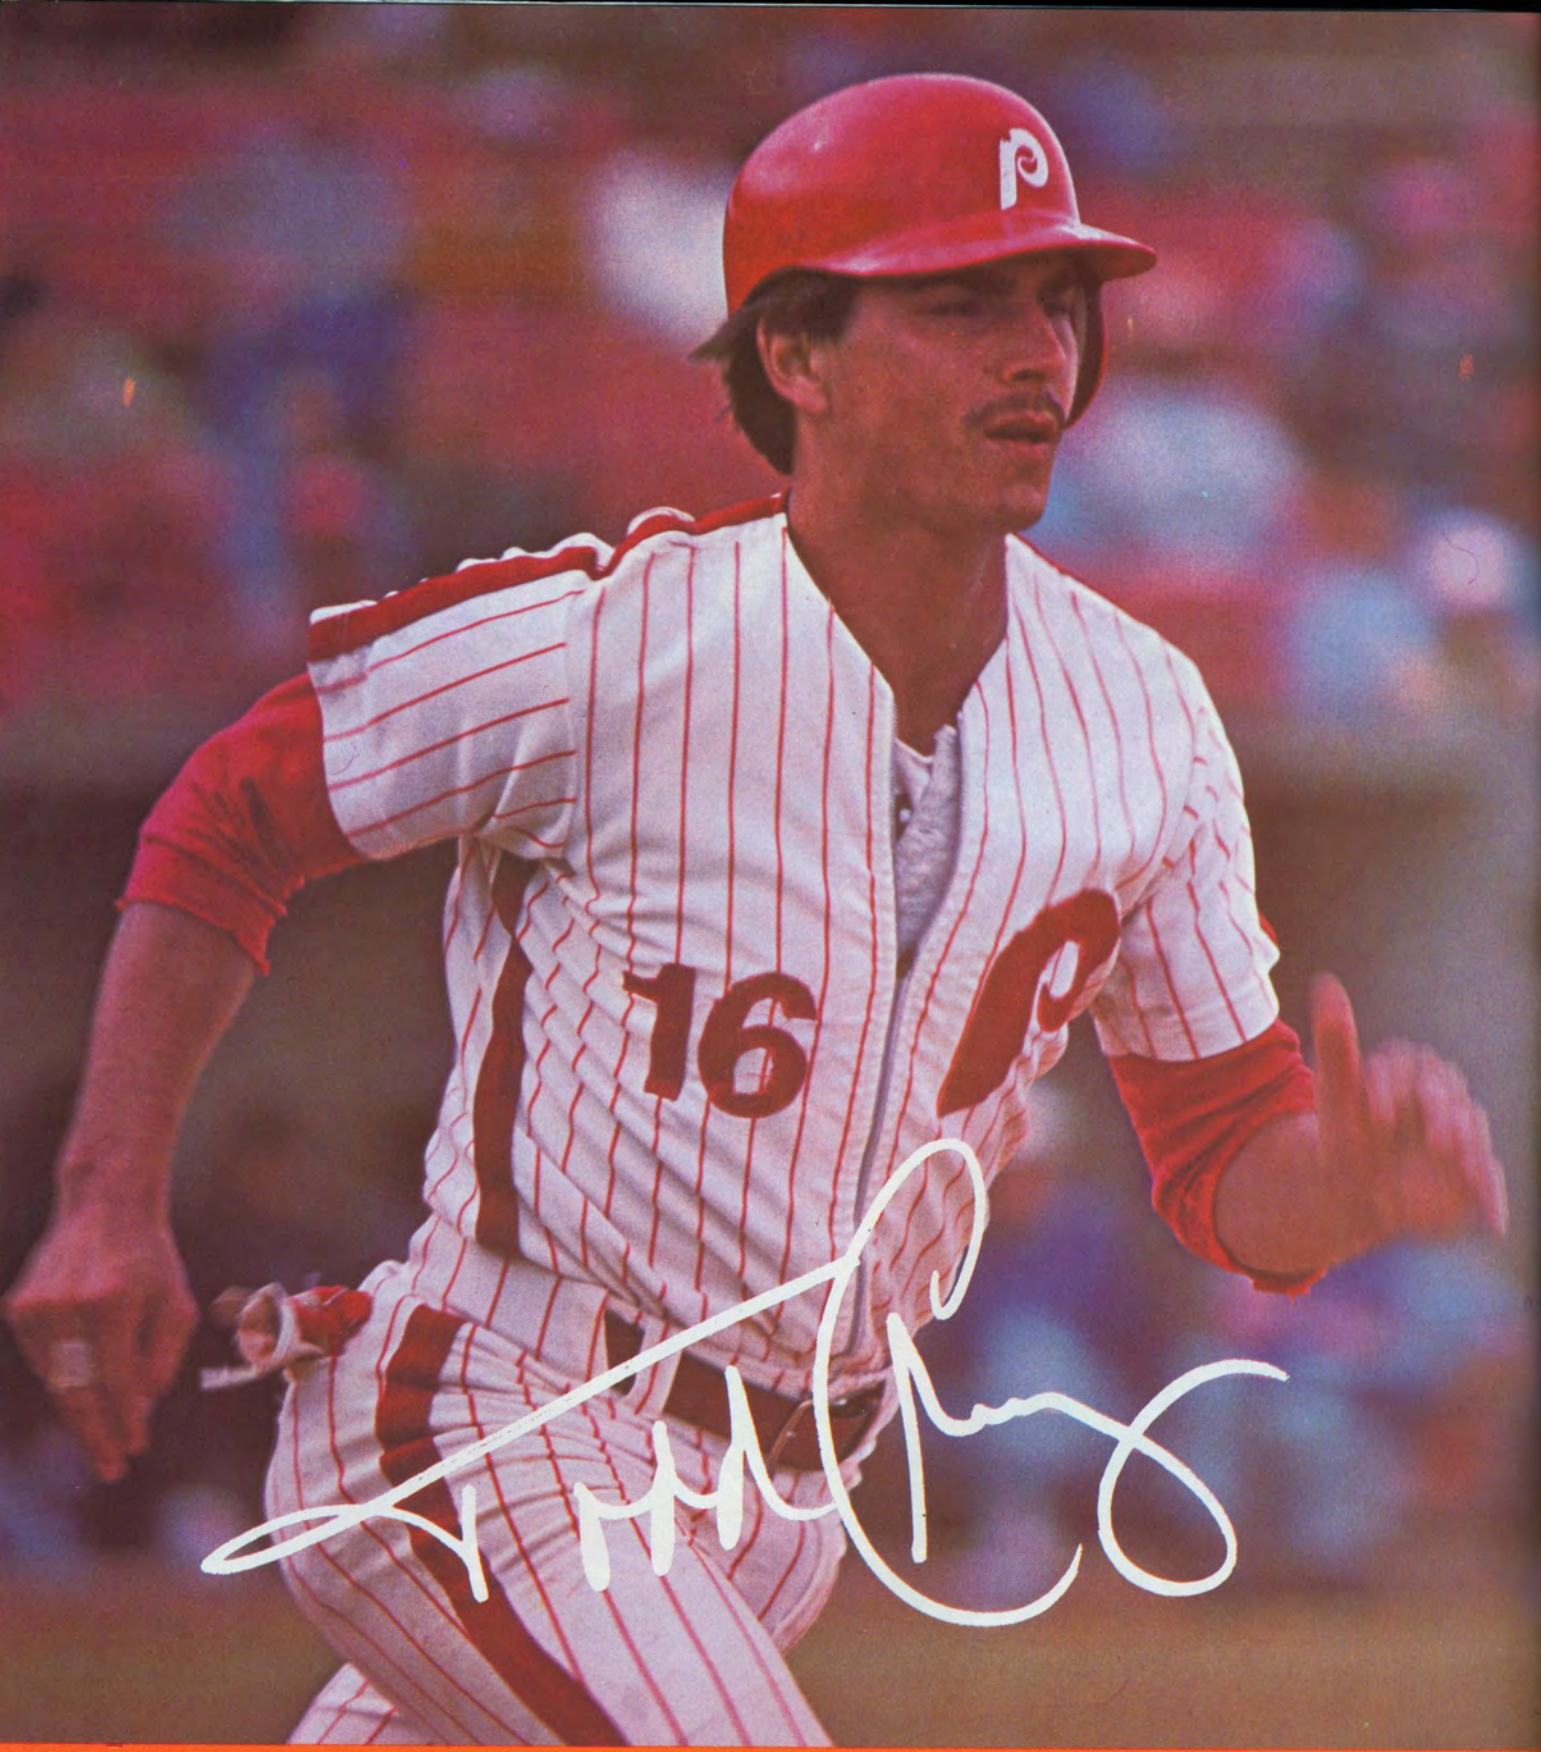
Jose Cardenal Jose Cardenal is a pleasant little guy who is very popular with his teammates. Last season when he was platooned at first base, the 5'10", 150 pound Jose constantly found himself the butt of jokes directed at him by taller players on the team. Ron Reed, a former basketball player who stands 6'6" would go over to first base during infield practice and get down on his knees to provide the same target at first for the infielders that Cardenal would present in the game. Jose, who was hampered the second part of the season with a groin pull, would retort with expressions of mock disdain and everybody would have a good time at his expense. He was a valuable player for Danny Ozark last year, a good pinch hitter, first baseman and spare outfielder who is a versatile player to have on your ballclub.



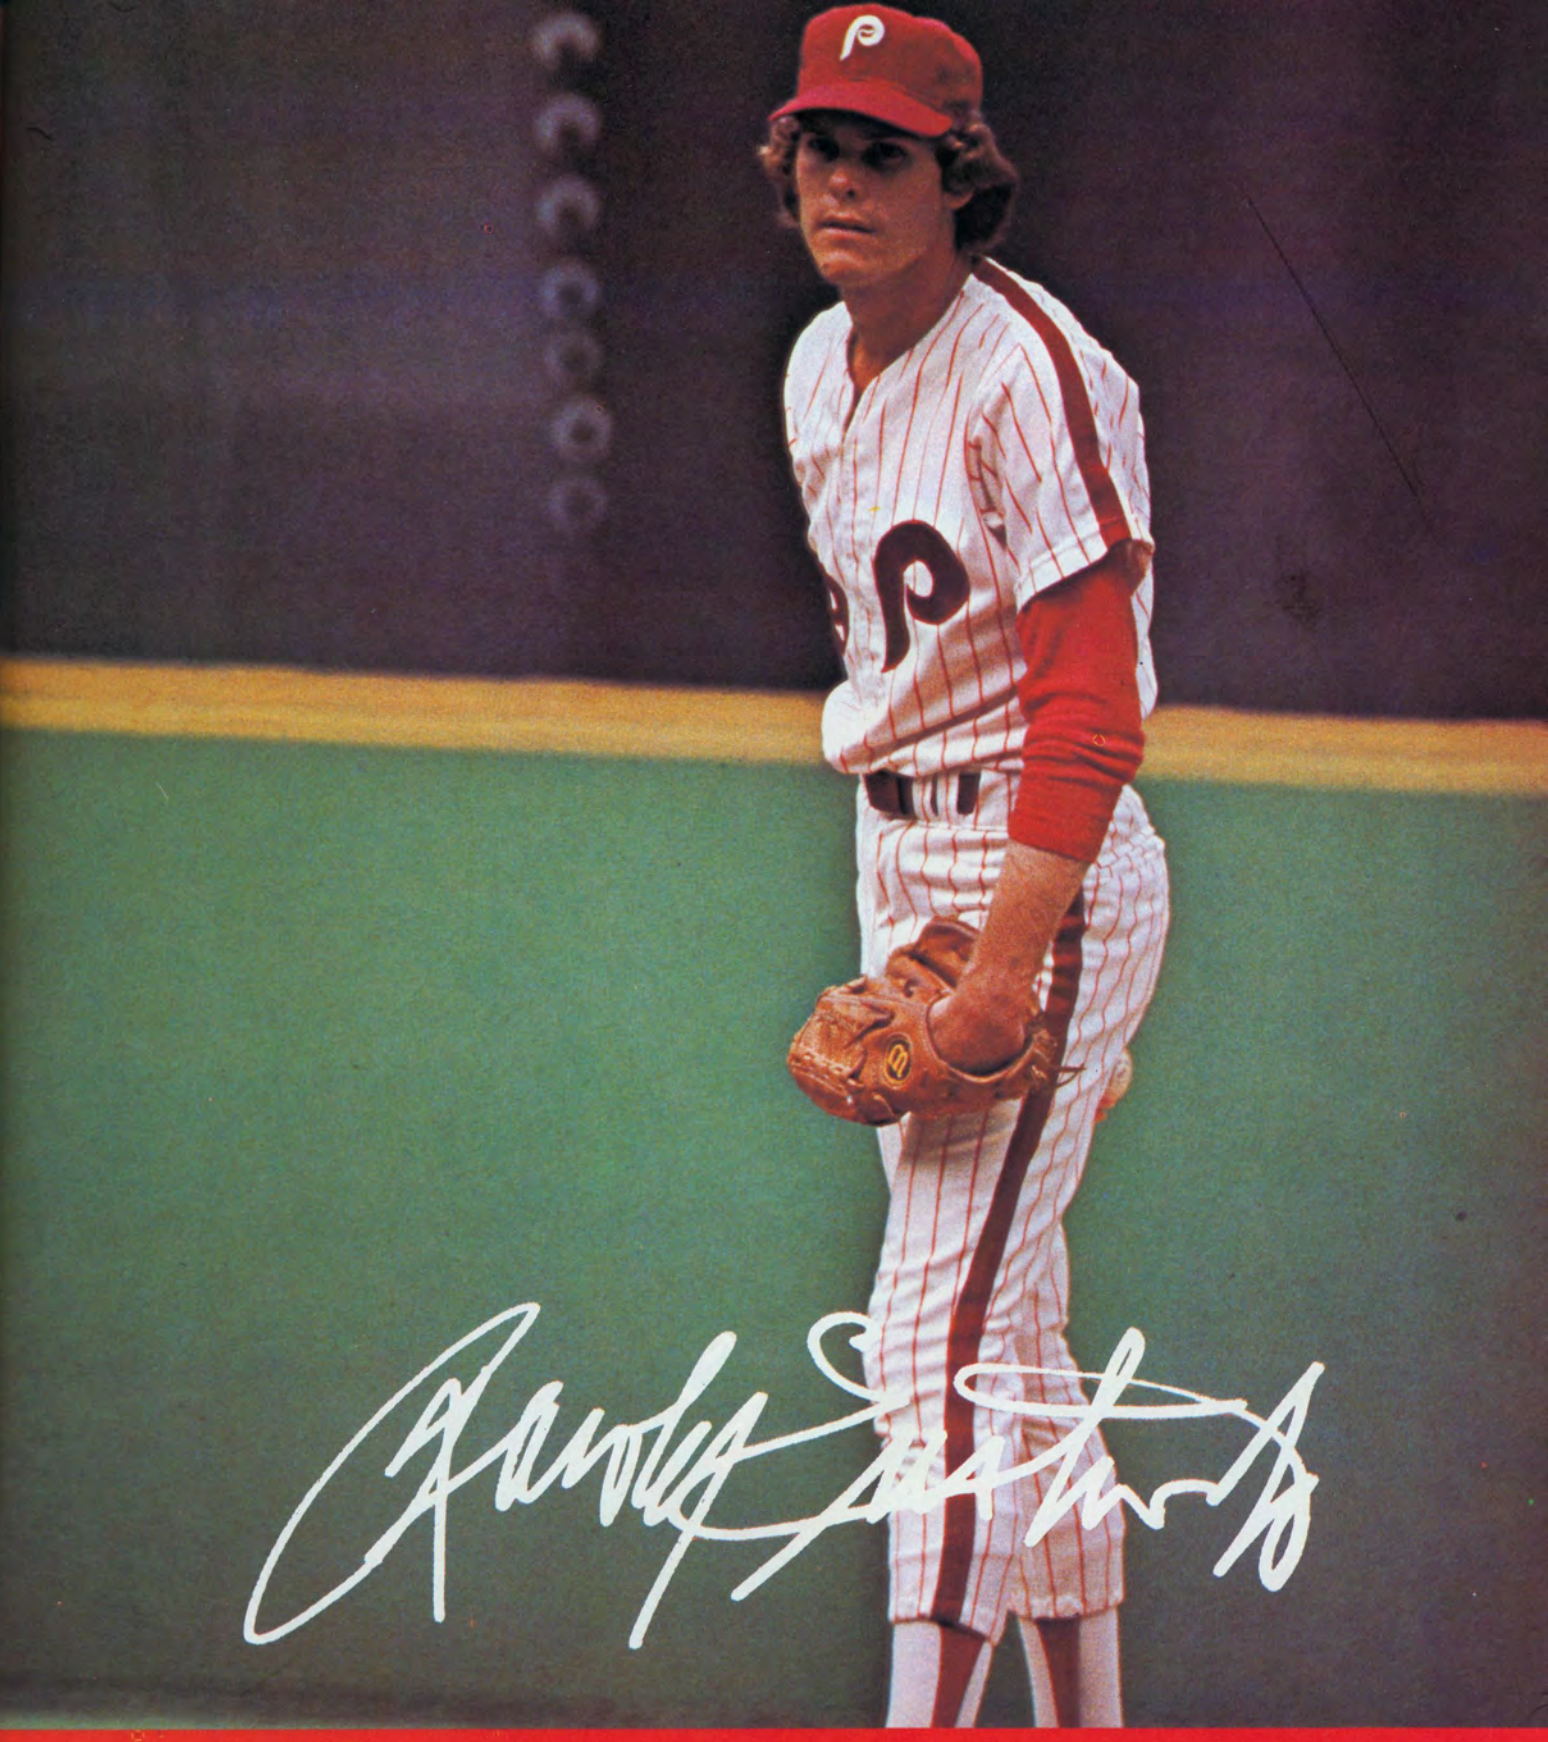
Steve Carlton Who is the National League pitcher with the most wins since 1972? Tom Seaver, Don Sutton, Phil Niekro. Wrong. With a total of 130 wins, Steve Carlton has the most wins of any NL pitcher since 1972. During that time the big lefthander has won two Cy Young awards and has given the Phillies a tremendous number one starter. He has pitched with some painful arm problems throughout his career with the Phillies including bursitis last year when Steve won a staff high 16 games and also led all pitchers in batting with a .291 average. He was the Phillies winning pitcher in their only victory in the Championship series, a game in which he also homered and drove in four runs.



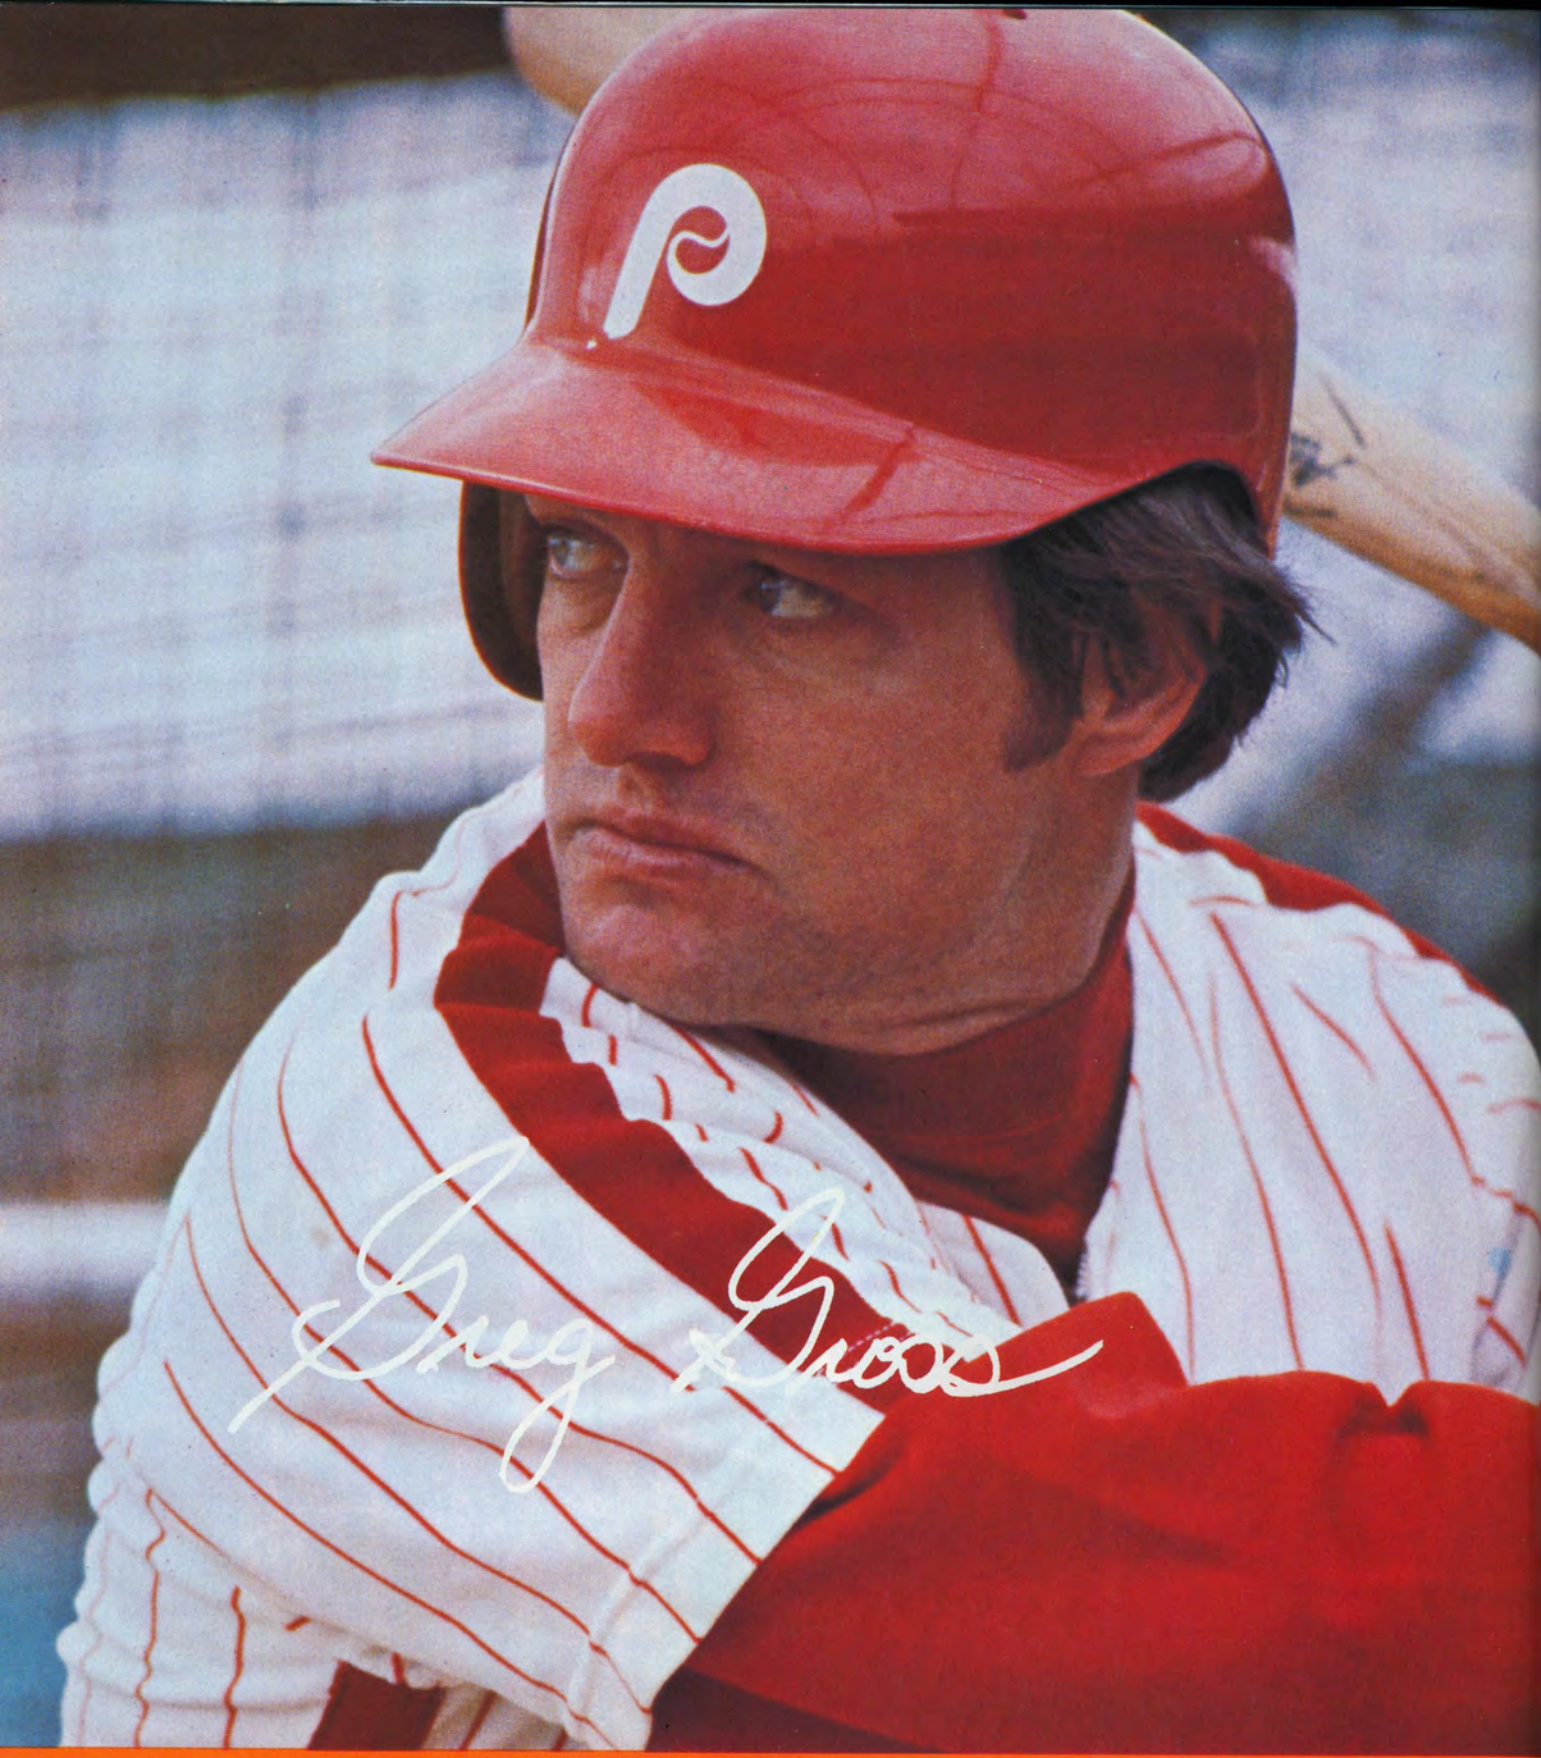
Larry Christenson Larry Christenson said he never felt better! He had been working out on his own during the off-season, had done a little throwing and couldn't wait for spring training. All that ended on a clear, February morning when the bicycle he was riding in support of the fight against Muscular Dystrophy ran into a rut near some railroad track in Northern California and slammed the big righthander to the ground. Christenson knew the cracking sound and the instant burning sensation meant that he had broken his collar bone and spring training would have to wait. In 1978, Larry was 13-14, however his ERA was down to 3.24 and he could have sued his teammates for non-support in some of the games. He knows he has a long way to come back from the broken collar bone, but Larry Christenson has never backed down from a challenge. The one he faces now will be his biggest.



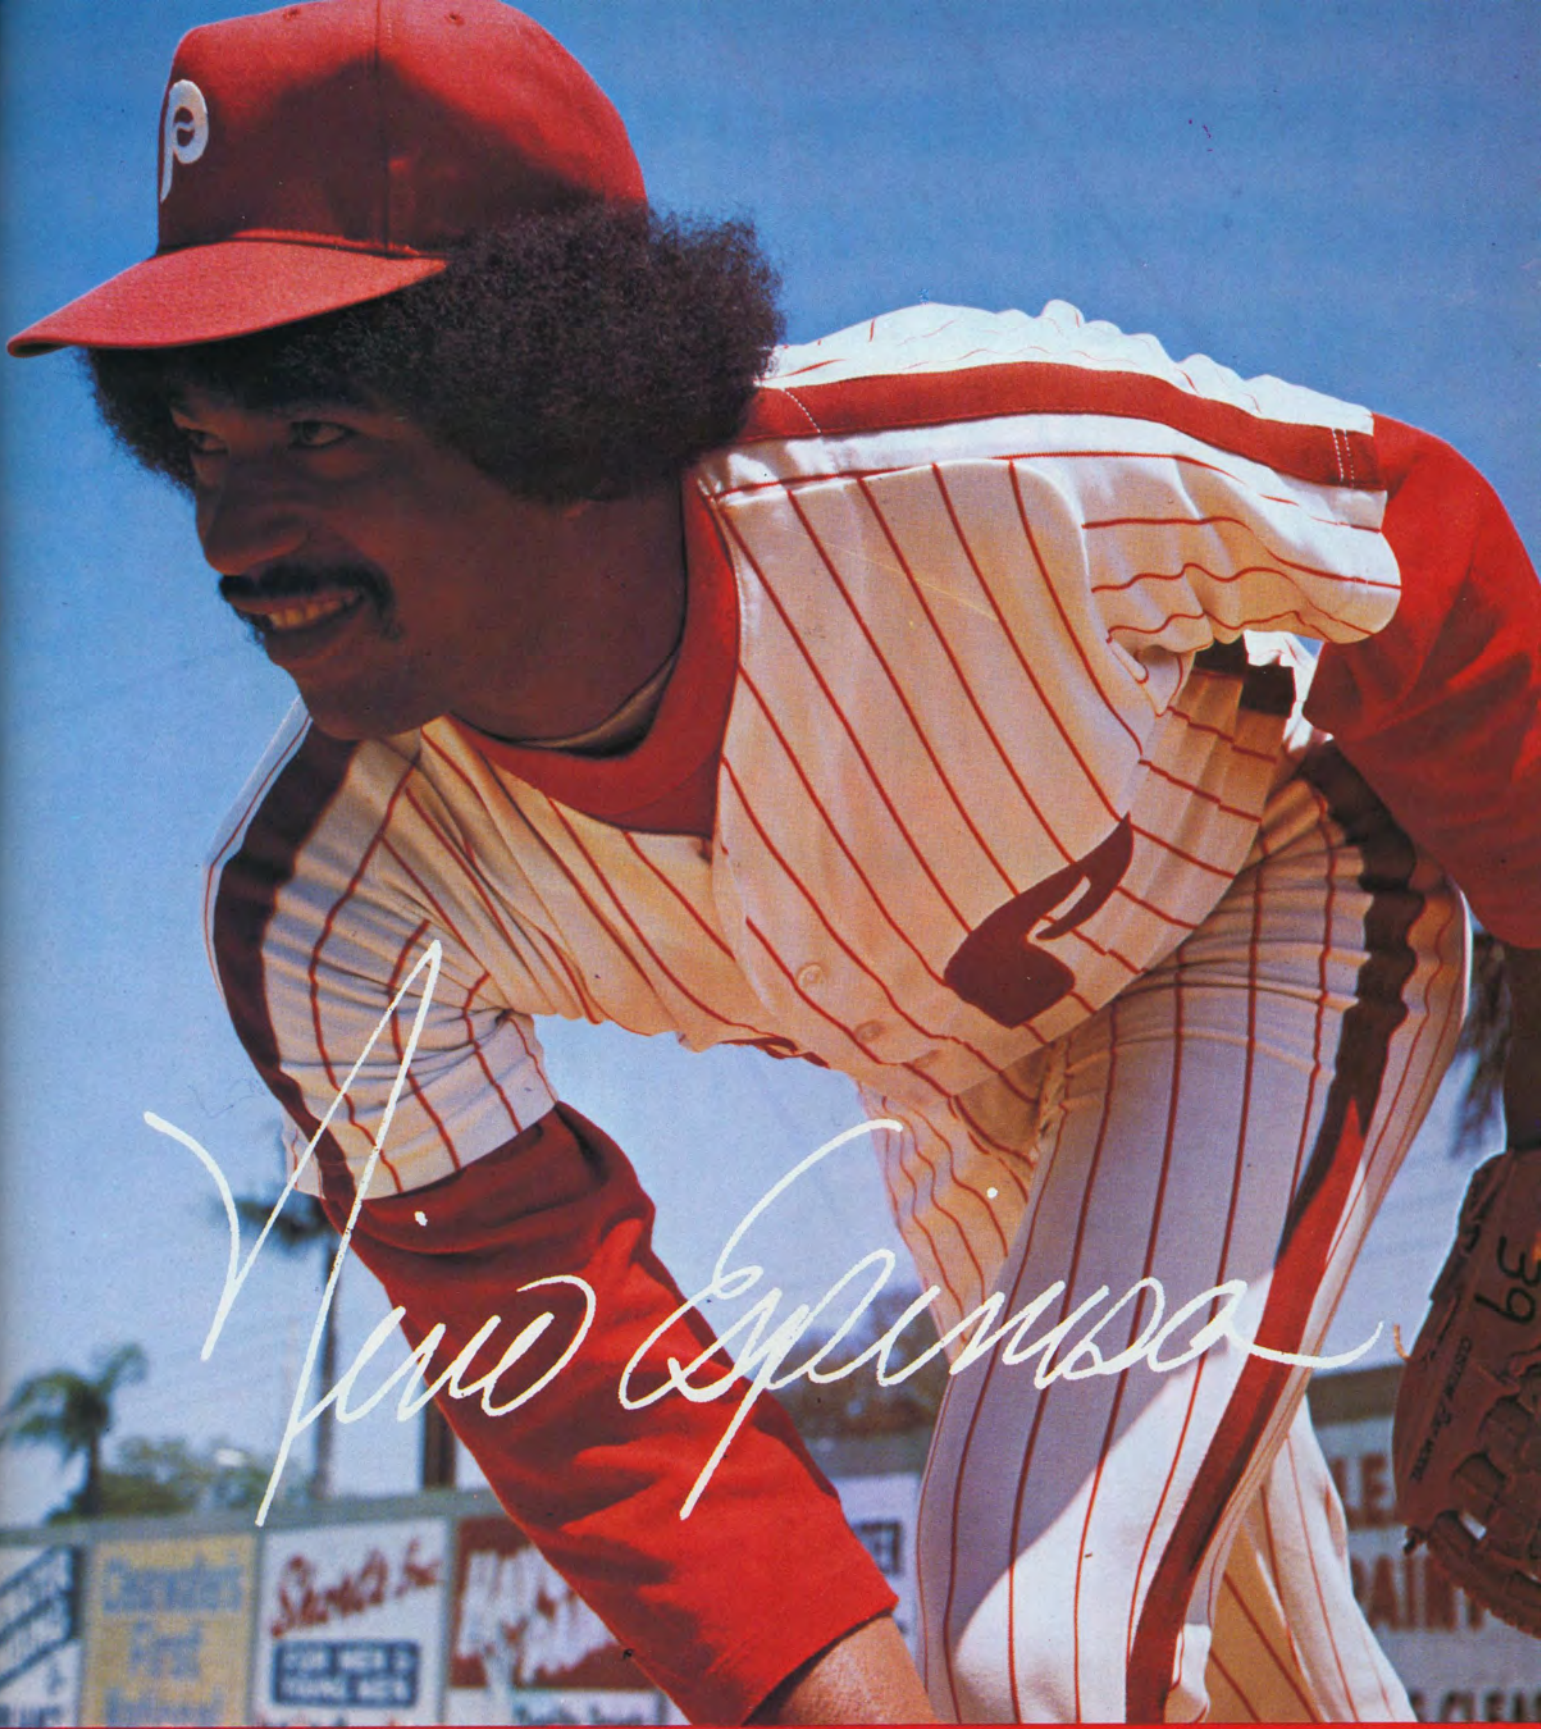
Todd Cruz Larry Bowa not only is the best shortstop in the National League but maybe in all of baseball. Which is nice if you are a Phillies fan but not so great if you're Todd Cruz who happens to be a pretty good shortstop with no place to play. Cruz was the most improved player on the Oklahoma City team last year and was voted the best shortstop in the American Association by the league managers. This past winter he continued his progress playing for Tony Taylor in the Venezuelan League where he also played very well leading his team in hitting with a .290 average and in RBI.



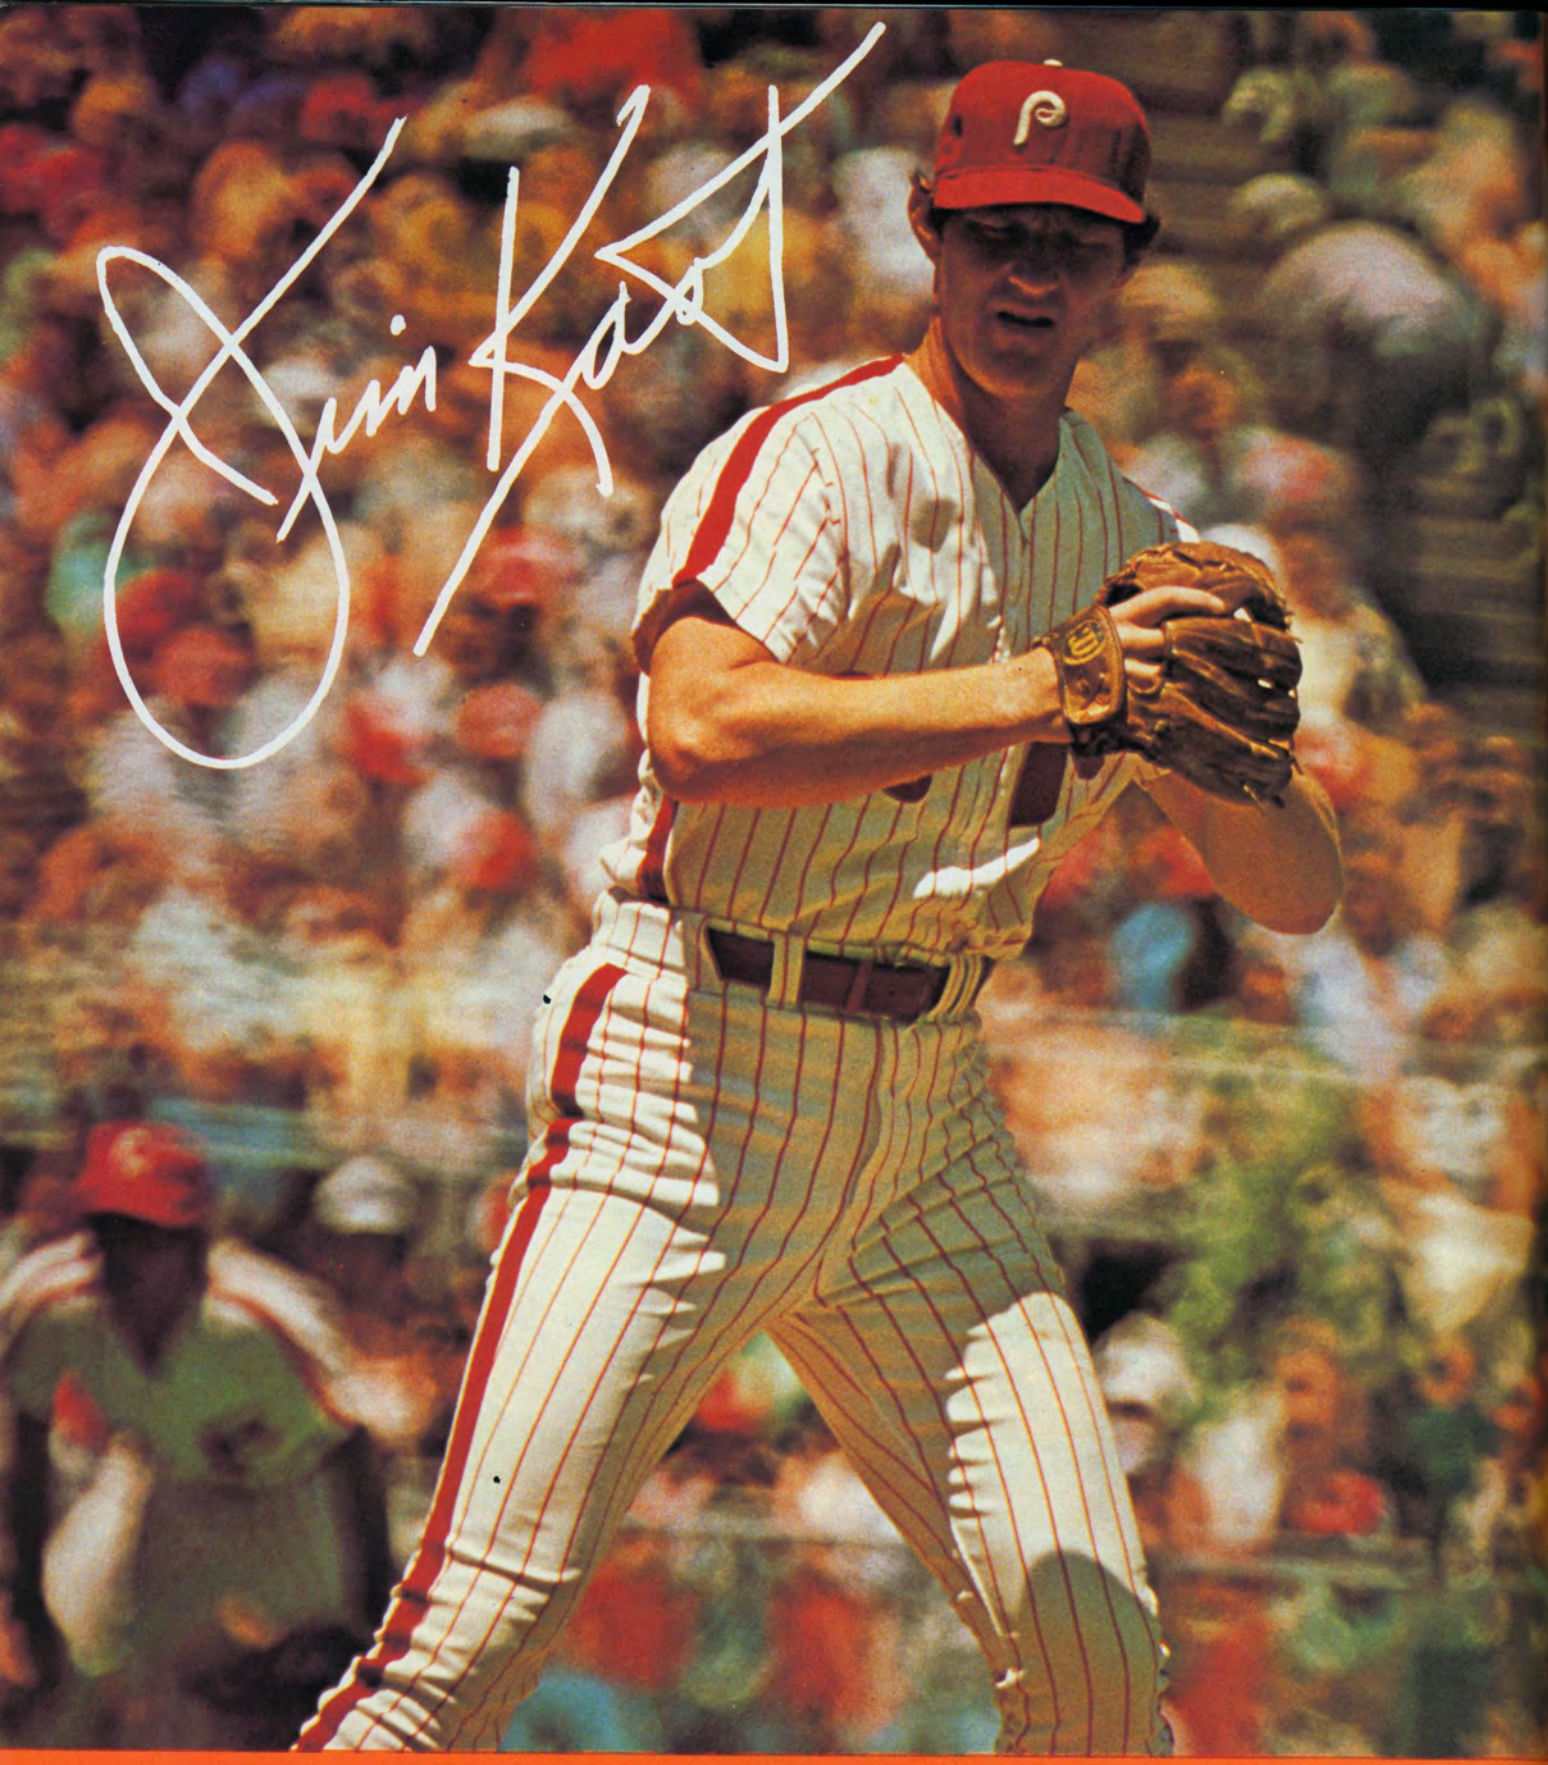
Rawly Eastwick It wasn't all that long ago that the top relief pitcher in the National League was a gangly kid from Haddonfield, N.J. named Rawlins J. Eastwick the Third. World Series hero in 1975, Fireman of the Year in 1976, Rawly Eastwick had it made. Then came a painful contract dispute with the Cincinnati Reds, a trade to St. Louis, free agent status and a big contract from the Yankees, then a trade to the Phillies. Eastwick has not seen much action the past two seasons and hopes to be more a part of the Phillies this year. Still young at 28 and possessing a good live fastball, he is the type of pitcher who could make it back to the tremendous heights he achieved just a short time ago.



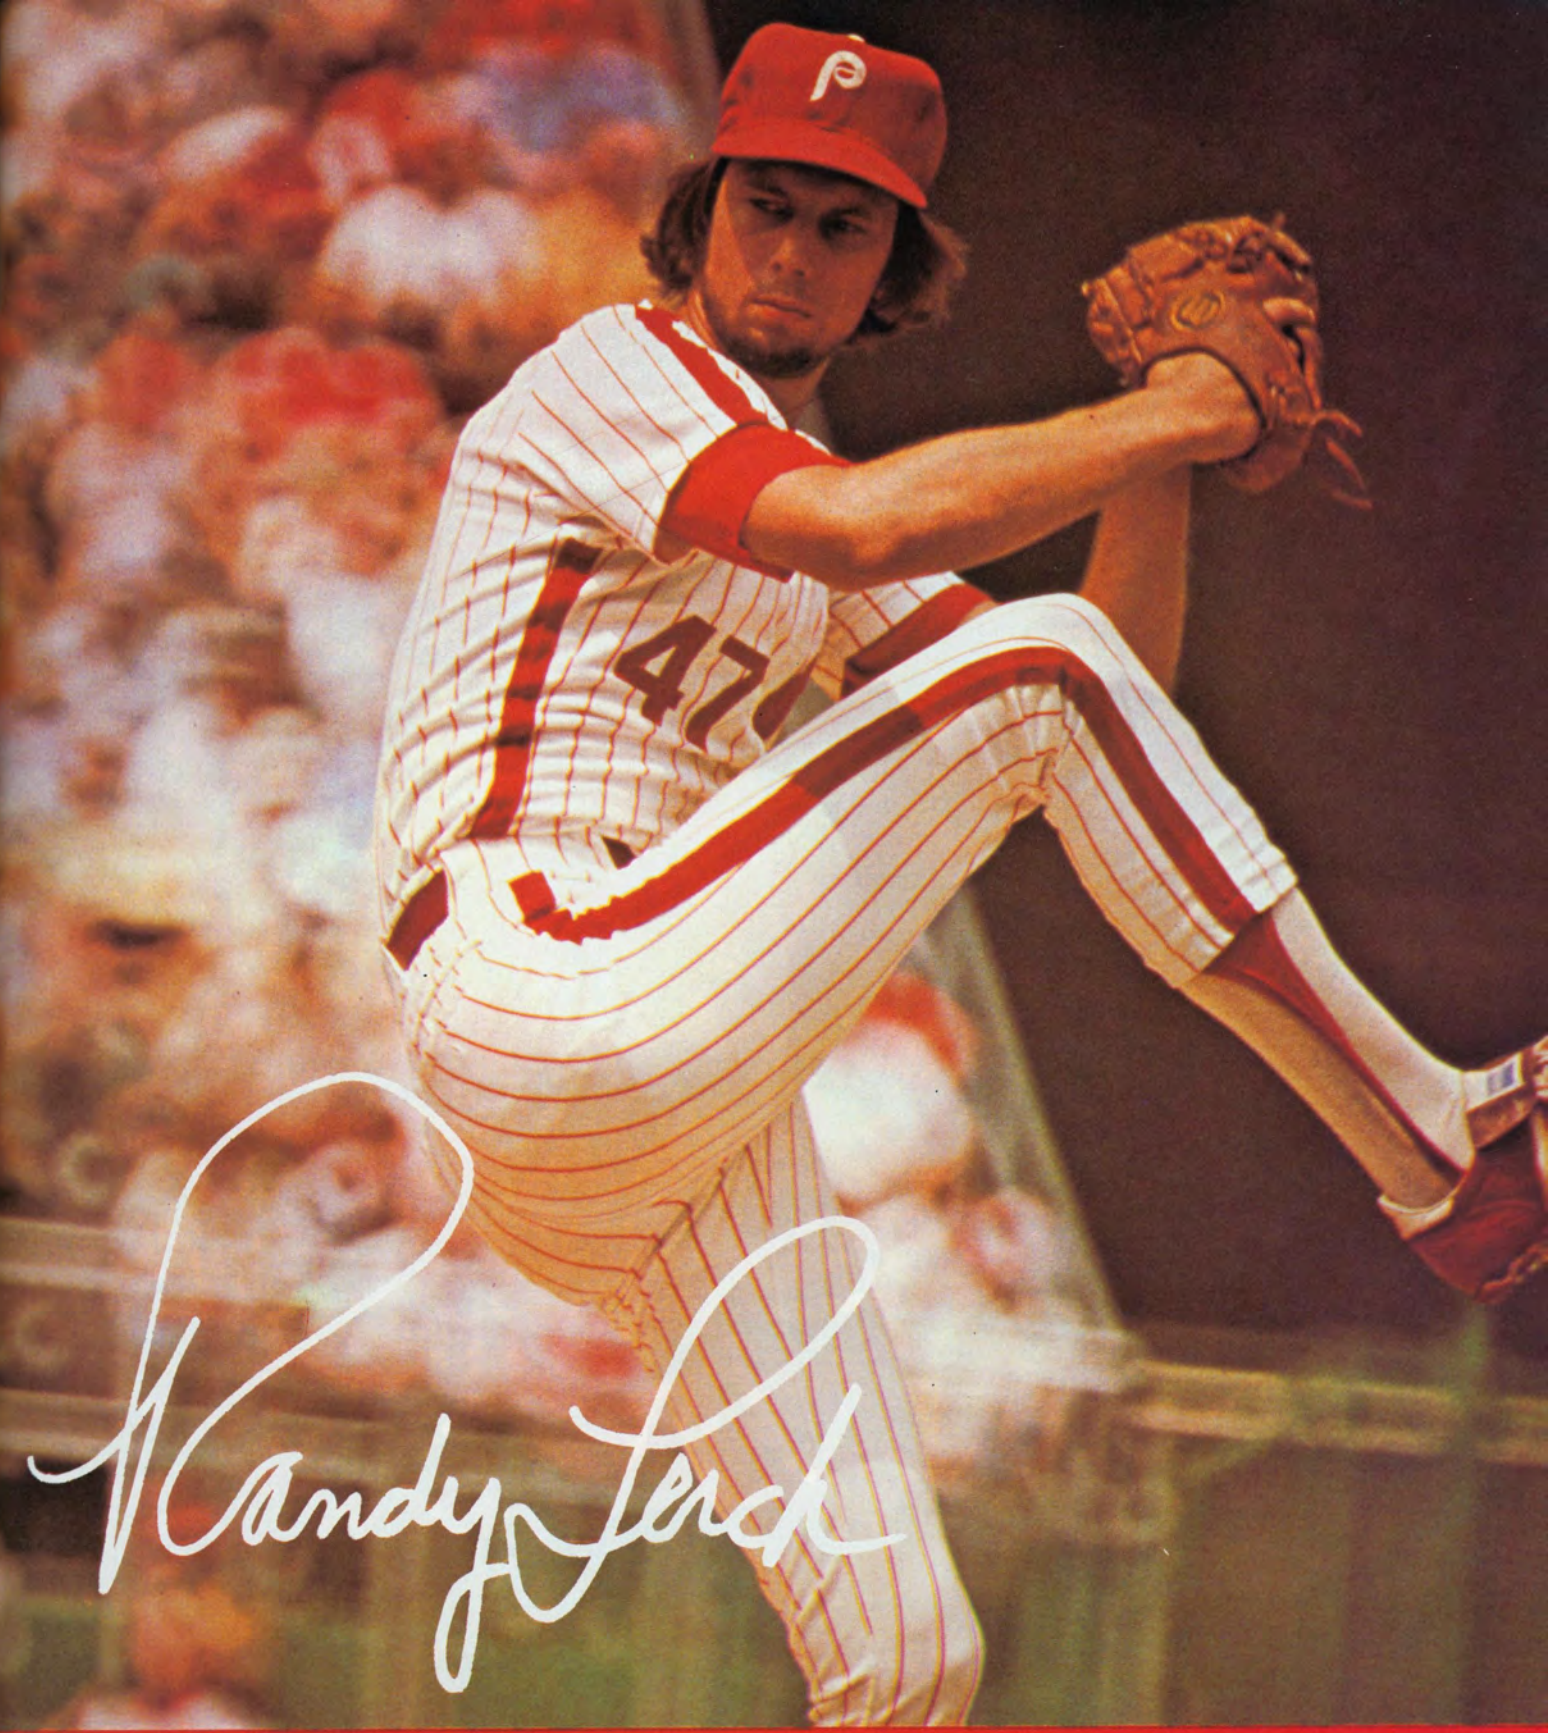
Greg Gross Larry Bowa is a big Greg Gross fan. The Phillies shortstop used to talk about the magic bat Gross seemed to carry to home plate while playing for Houston and Chicago. Everyone knew that Gross liked to hit the ball to left field and that he specialized in hitting hard ground balls through the hole at shortstop. Bowa says he would play Gross perfectly and the Etters, Pa., native still would manage to shoot base hits through a very small space. THE SPORTING NEWS named him Rookie of the Year in 1974 after he hit .314 for the Astros. A contact type hitter, he hit .322 in 115 games for the Cubs in 1977. The 26-year-old Gross can play all three outfield positions and will be a versatile player for Danny Ozark to have on his ballclub.



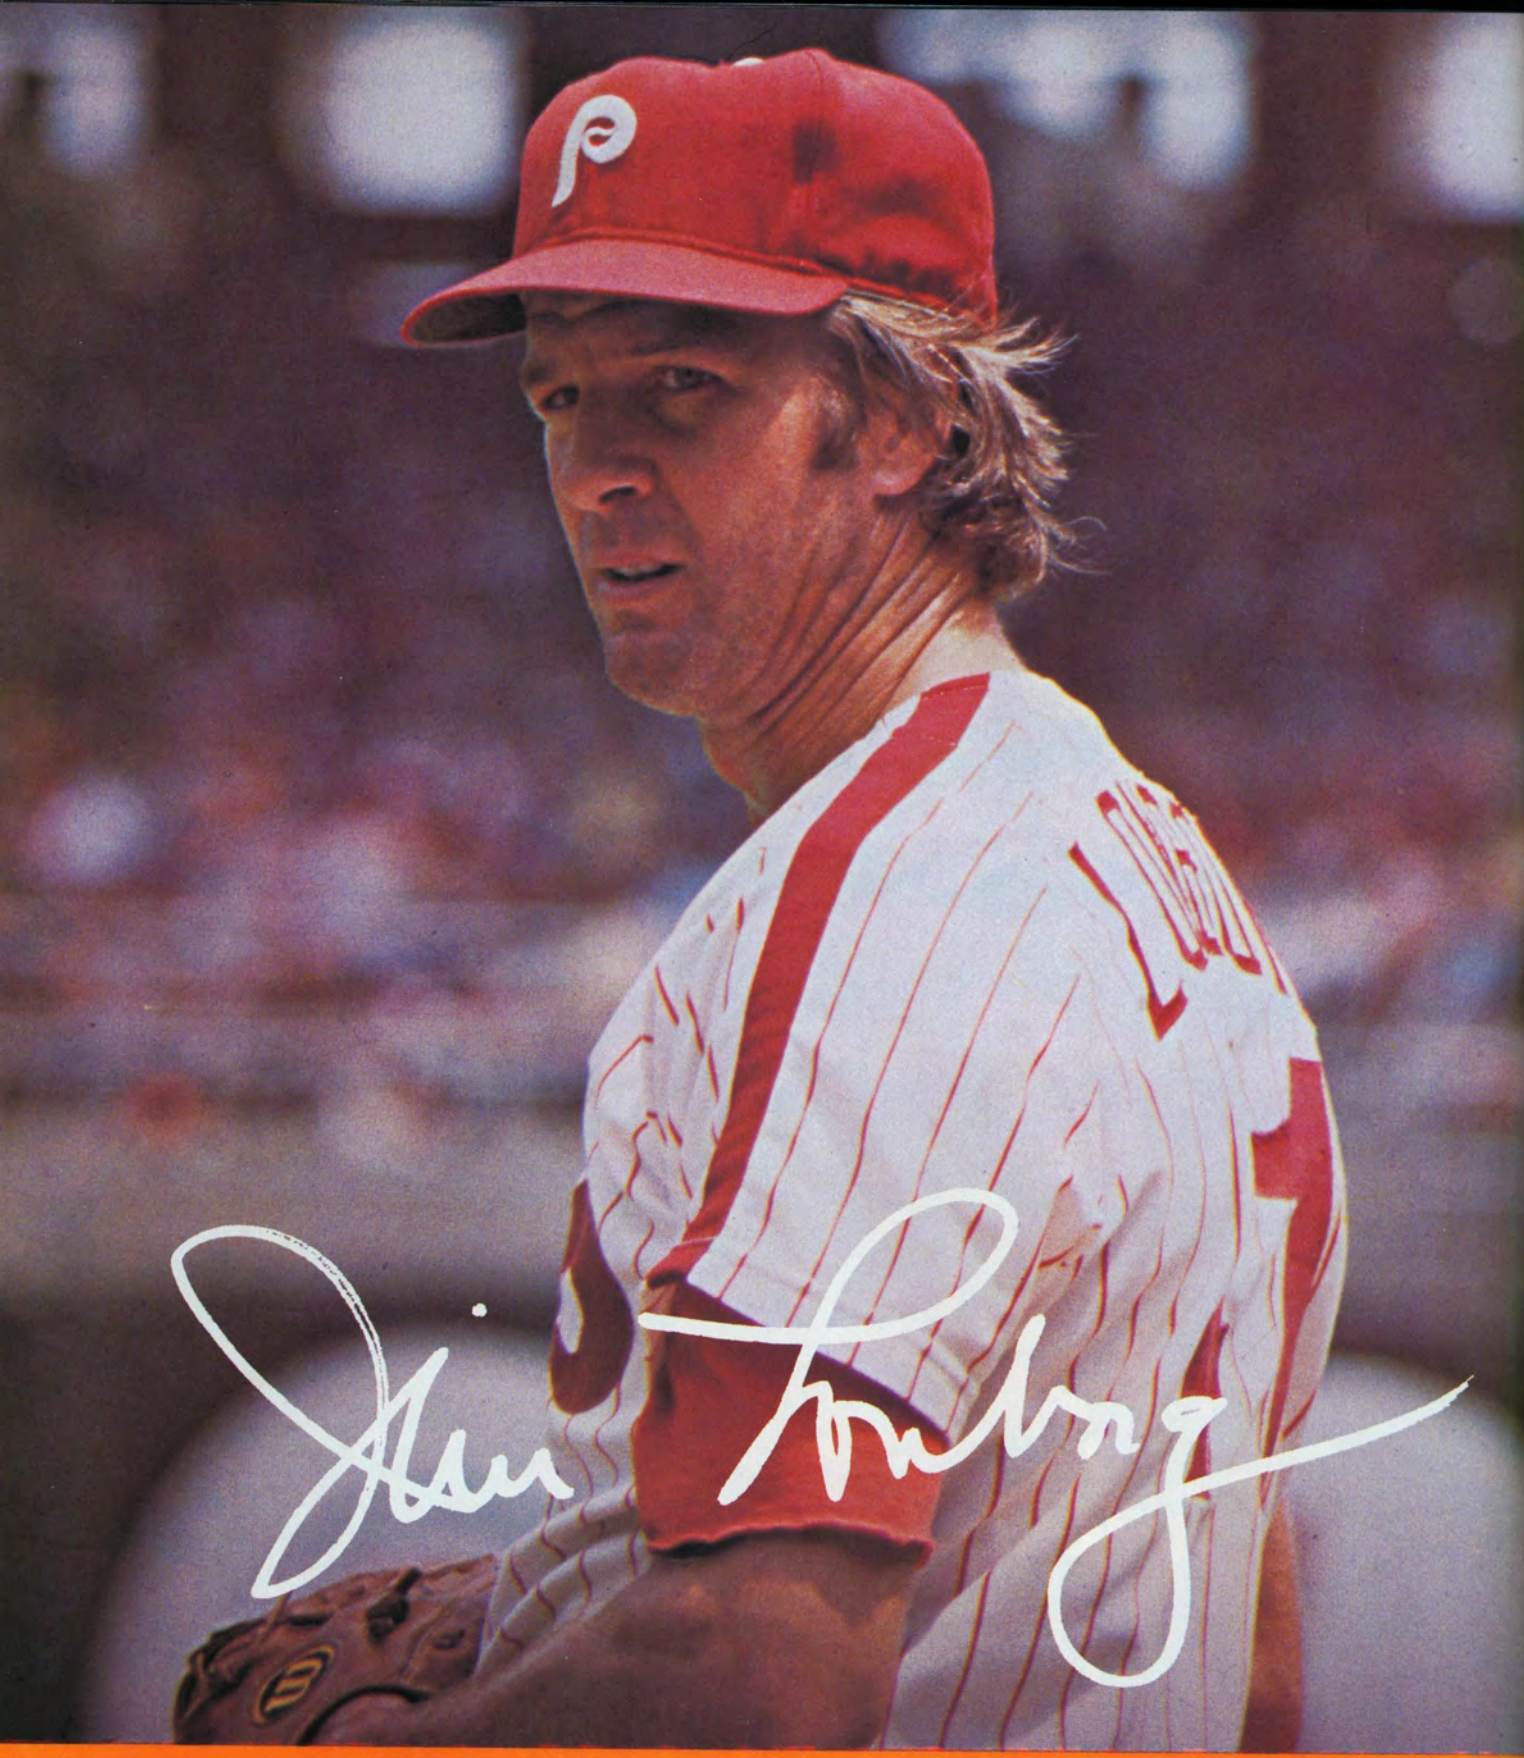
Nino Espinosa Paul Owens is a man of patience. He wanted to add a second baseman and a pitcher to the 1979 Phillies and spent all winter working on deals. He finally pried Manny Trillo away from the Cubs in February to solve second base and then in late March picked up young righthander Nino Espinosa from the Mets. "We feel we got a pretty good pitcher. He's young and should help us for several years," explained Owens. "With our infield defense and depth in the bullpen, I'm looking for him to really help our starting rotation." Espinosa is also a fine all-around athlete. He led Mets pitchers with 14 hits a year ago and has committed just one error in the big leagues.



Jim Kaat Last November there was a big birthday party out in suburban Glen Mills, Pa. Seems a guy named Jim Kaat who owns a farm out in that beautiful area turned 40 years old but certainly wasn't about to head for a steady occupation of work around the house. One of the best conditioned athletes in any sport, Kaat has been flinging baseballs for 18 years and has amassed some impressive statistics like 261 lifetime victories and a 25-13 season in 1966. Used as a spot starter last year, "Kitty" appears headed for the same role with the Phillies in 1979. Whatever his job, he plans for his office to be a major league ballpark and the farm can wait for later.

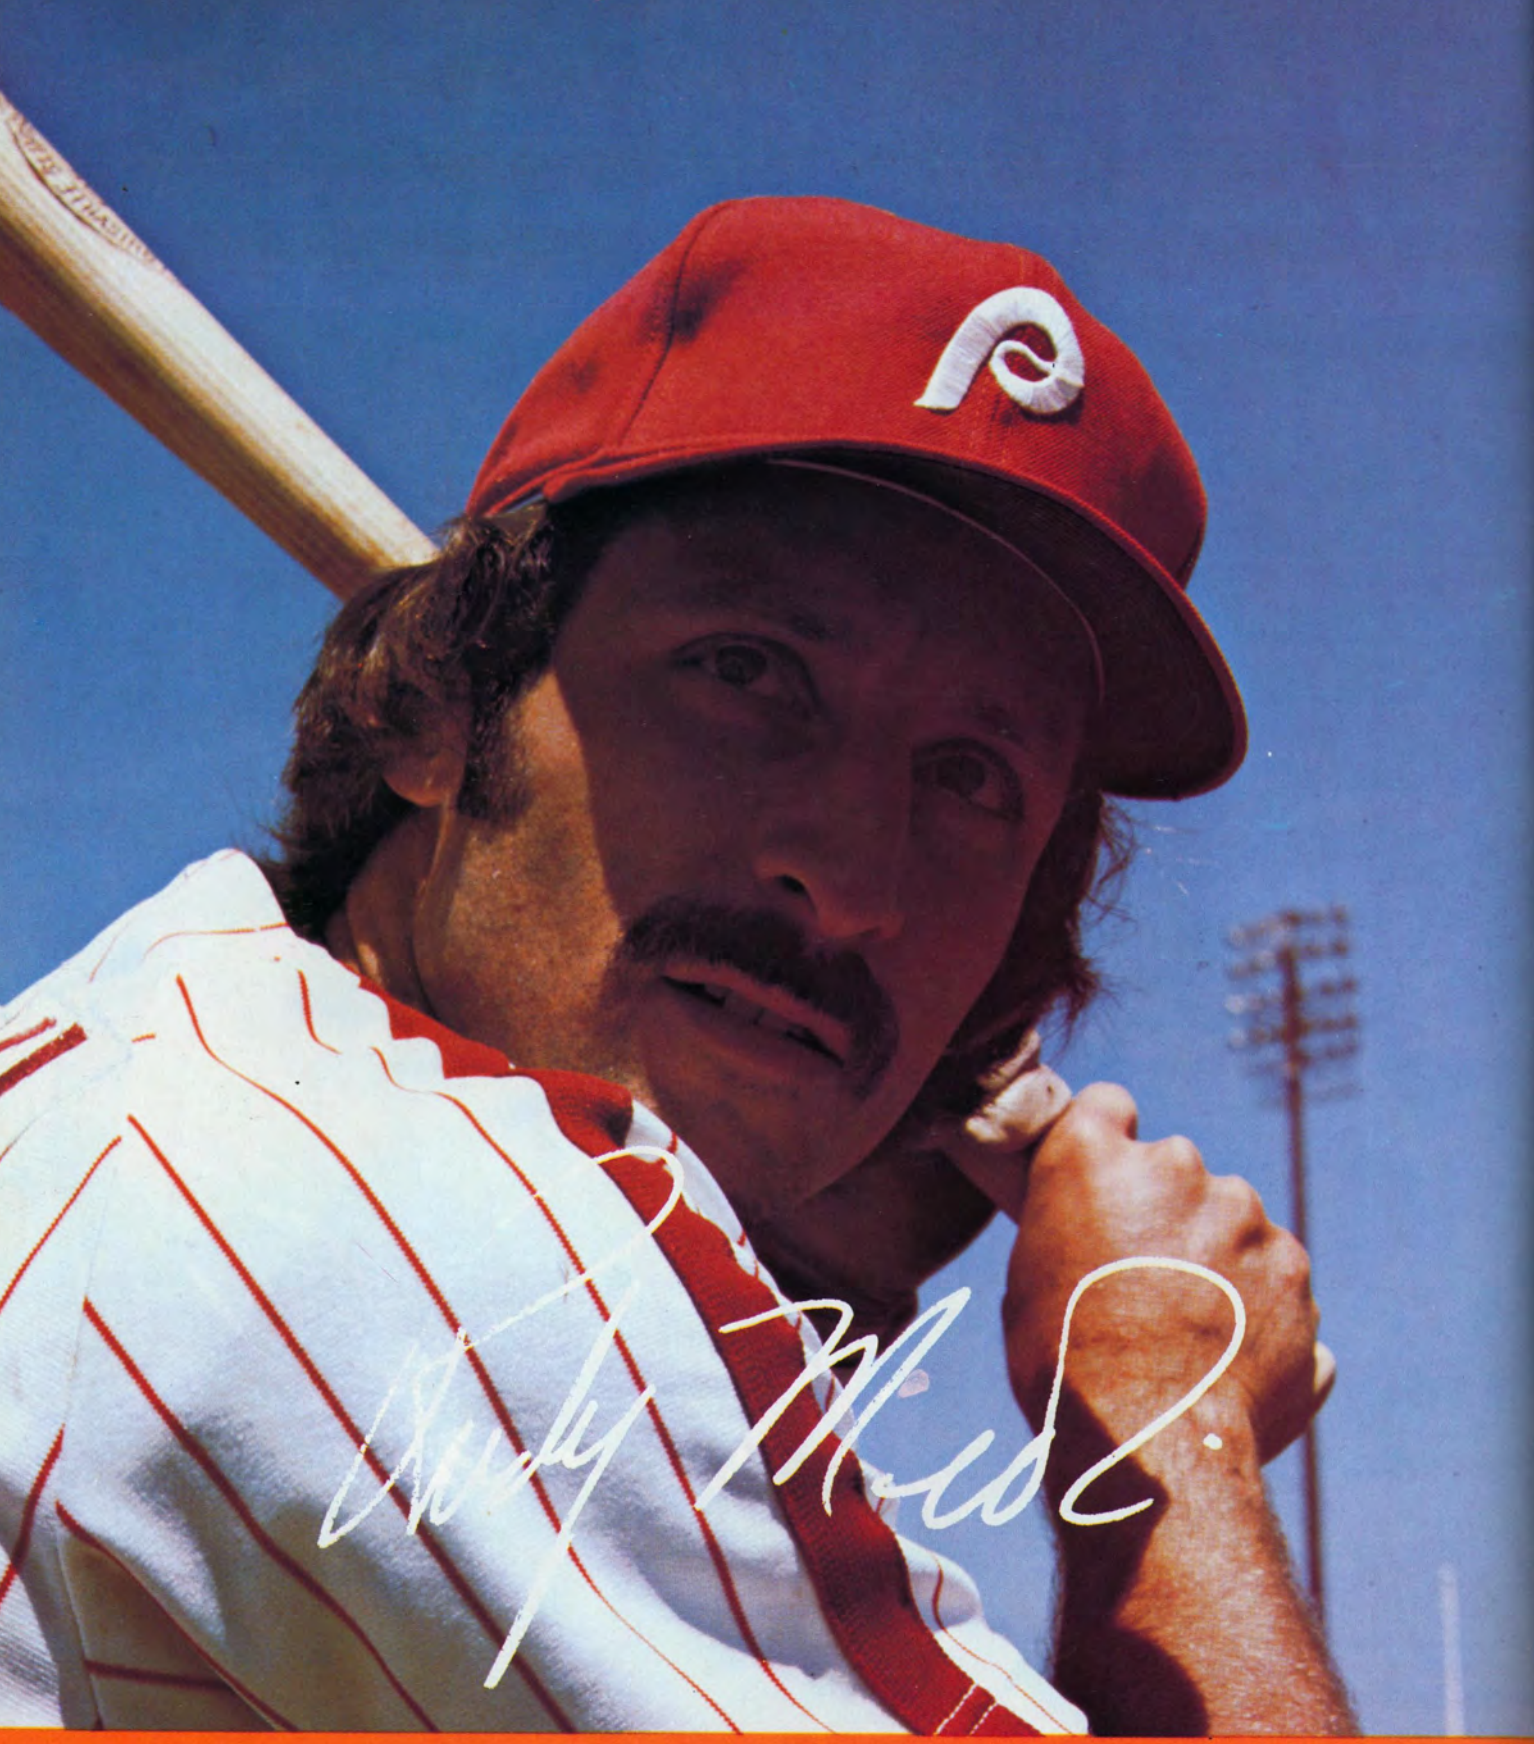


Randy Lerch The Phillies were looking a crucial 15-game road trip right in the eye and had dropped the first two games in late innings to the Dodgers. They needed a win in the worst way and up stepped young Randy Lerch to pitch the biggest game of his promising career as he beat LA and started the Phillies on their way to a 9-6 road trip that might have saved the club's season. Lerch also was the winner in the Division clincher at Pittsburgh in late September and had a fine 11-8 season, including a 7-2 record the second half. Stardom has long been predicted for the 24-year-old lefthander with the popping fastball and that night in Los Angeles may have been the start of something very big for the Phillies and Randy Lerch.

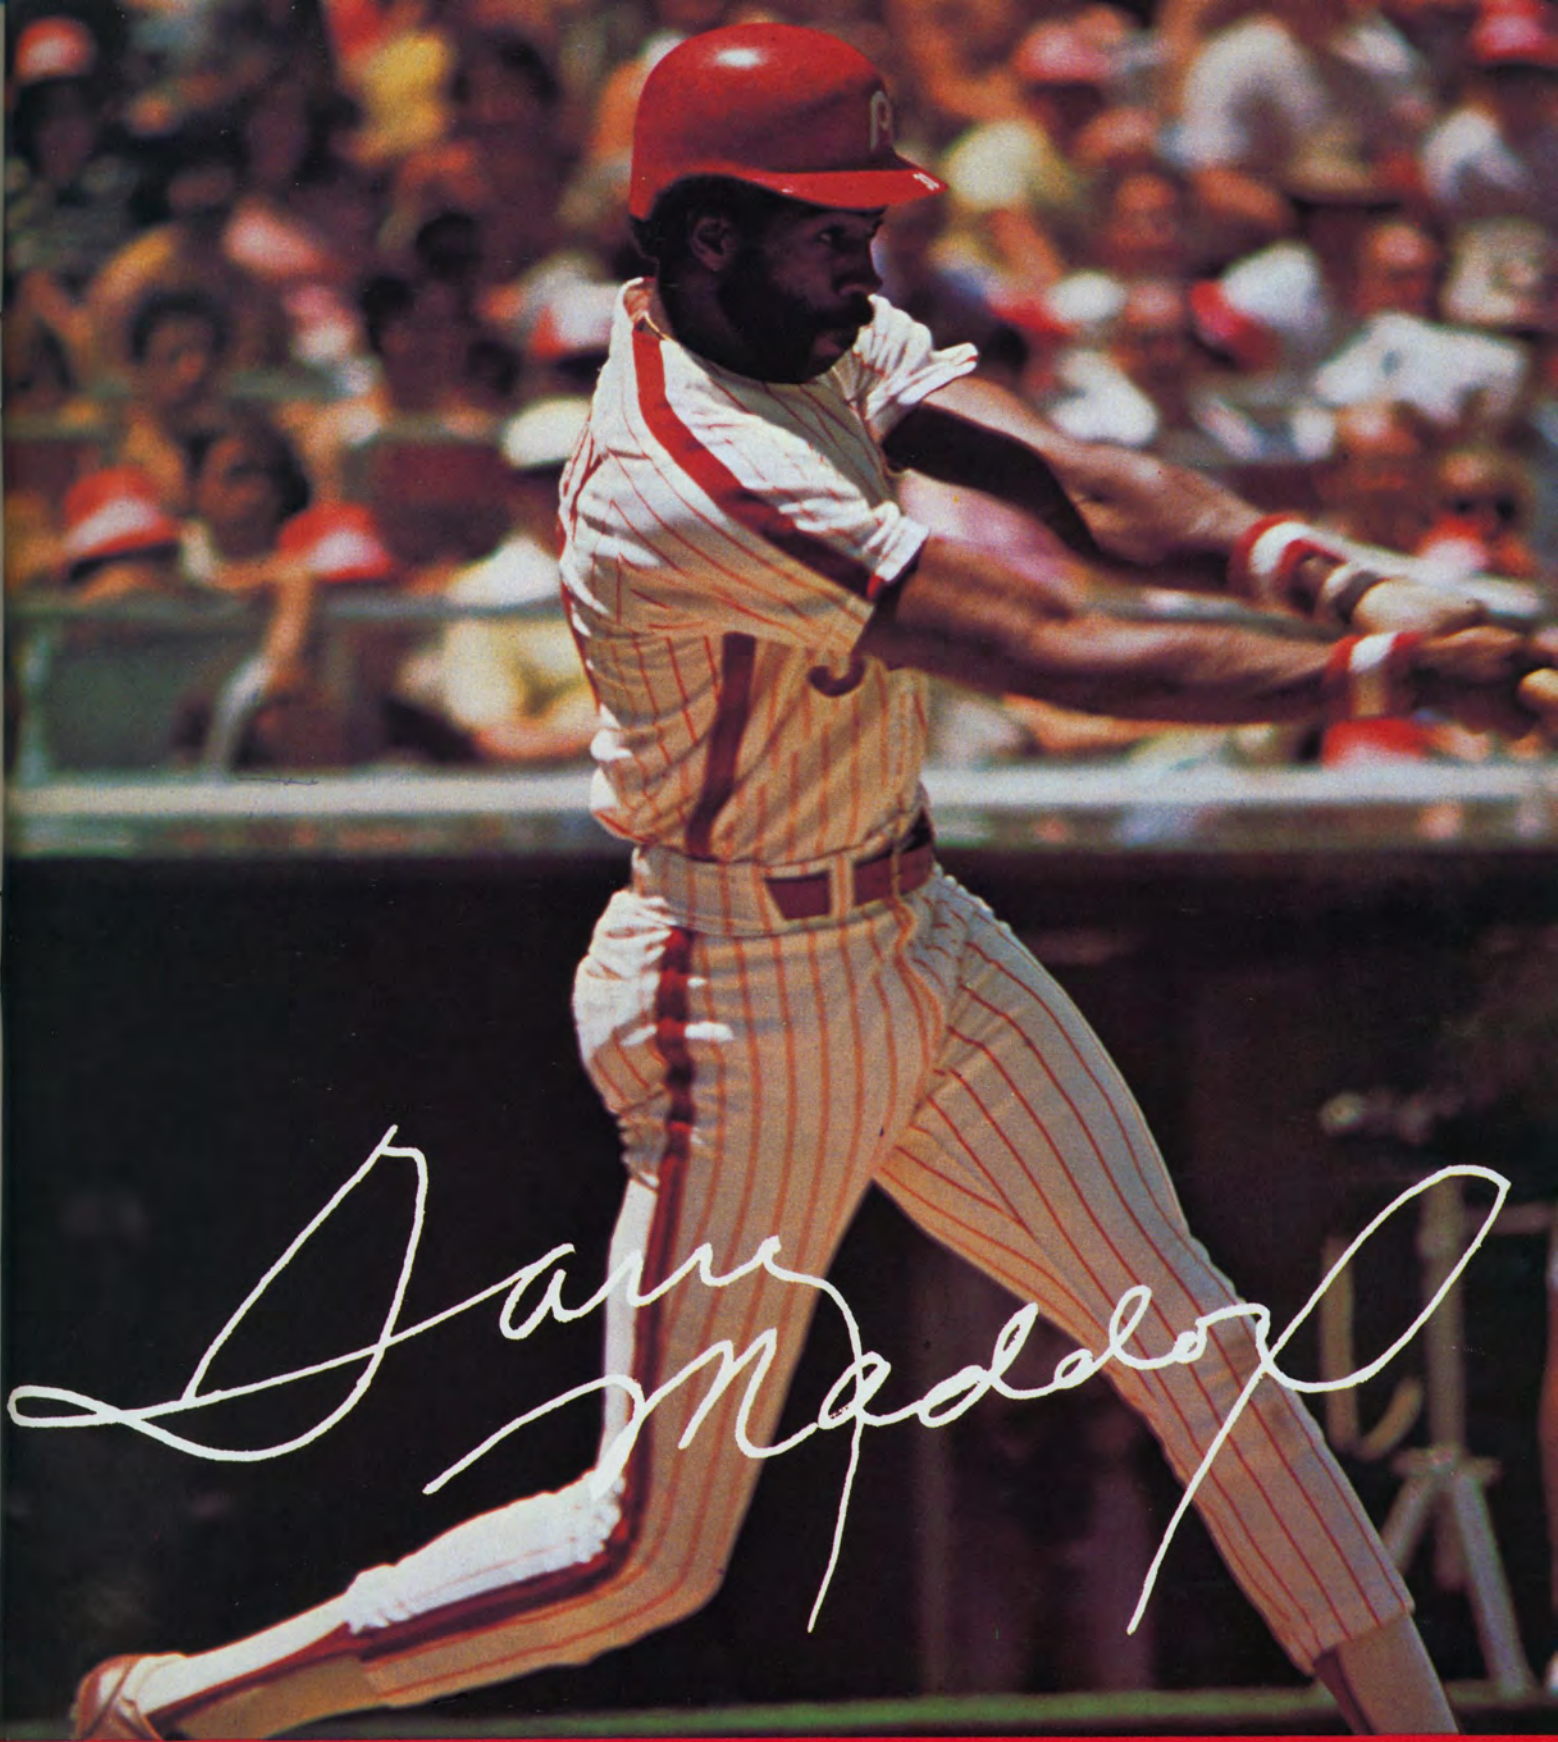


Jim Lonborg Jim Lonborg has to lead the league in comebacks and courage. The 1967 American League Cy Young Award winner has battled a number of injuries during his impressive career and last year once again fell victim to the shoulder problems that have hampered his performance off and on the past few years. "Lonnie" was effective in the early part of the 1978 season posting a 7-6 record before experiencing problems with the shoulder. The emergence of Dick Ruthven and improvement of Randy Lerch then relegated Lonborg to spot duty and he pitched just three times after July 29. Since coming to the Phillies in 1972, Lonborg has posted a 75-59 record and has been a tremendous representative of the Phillies.

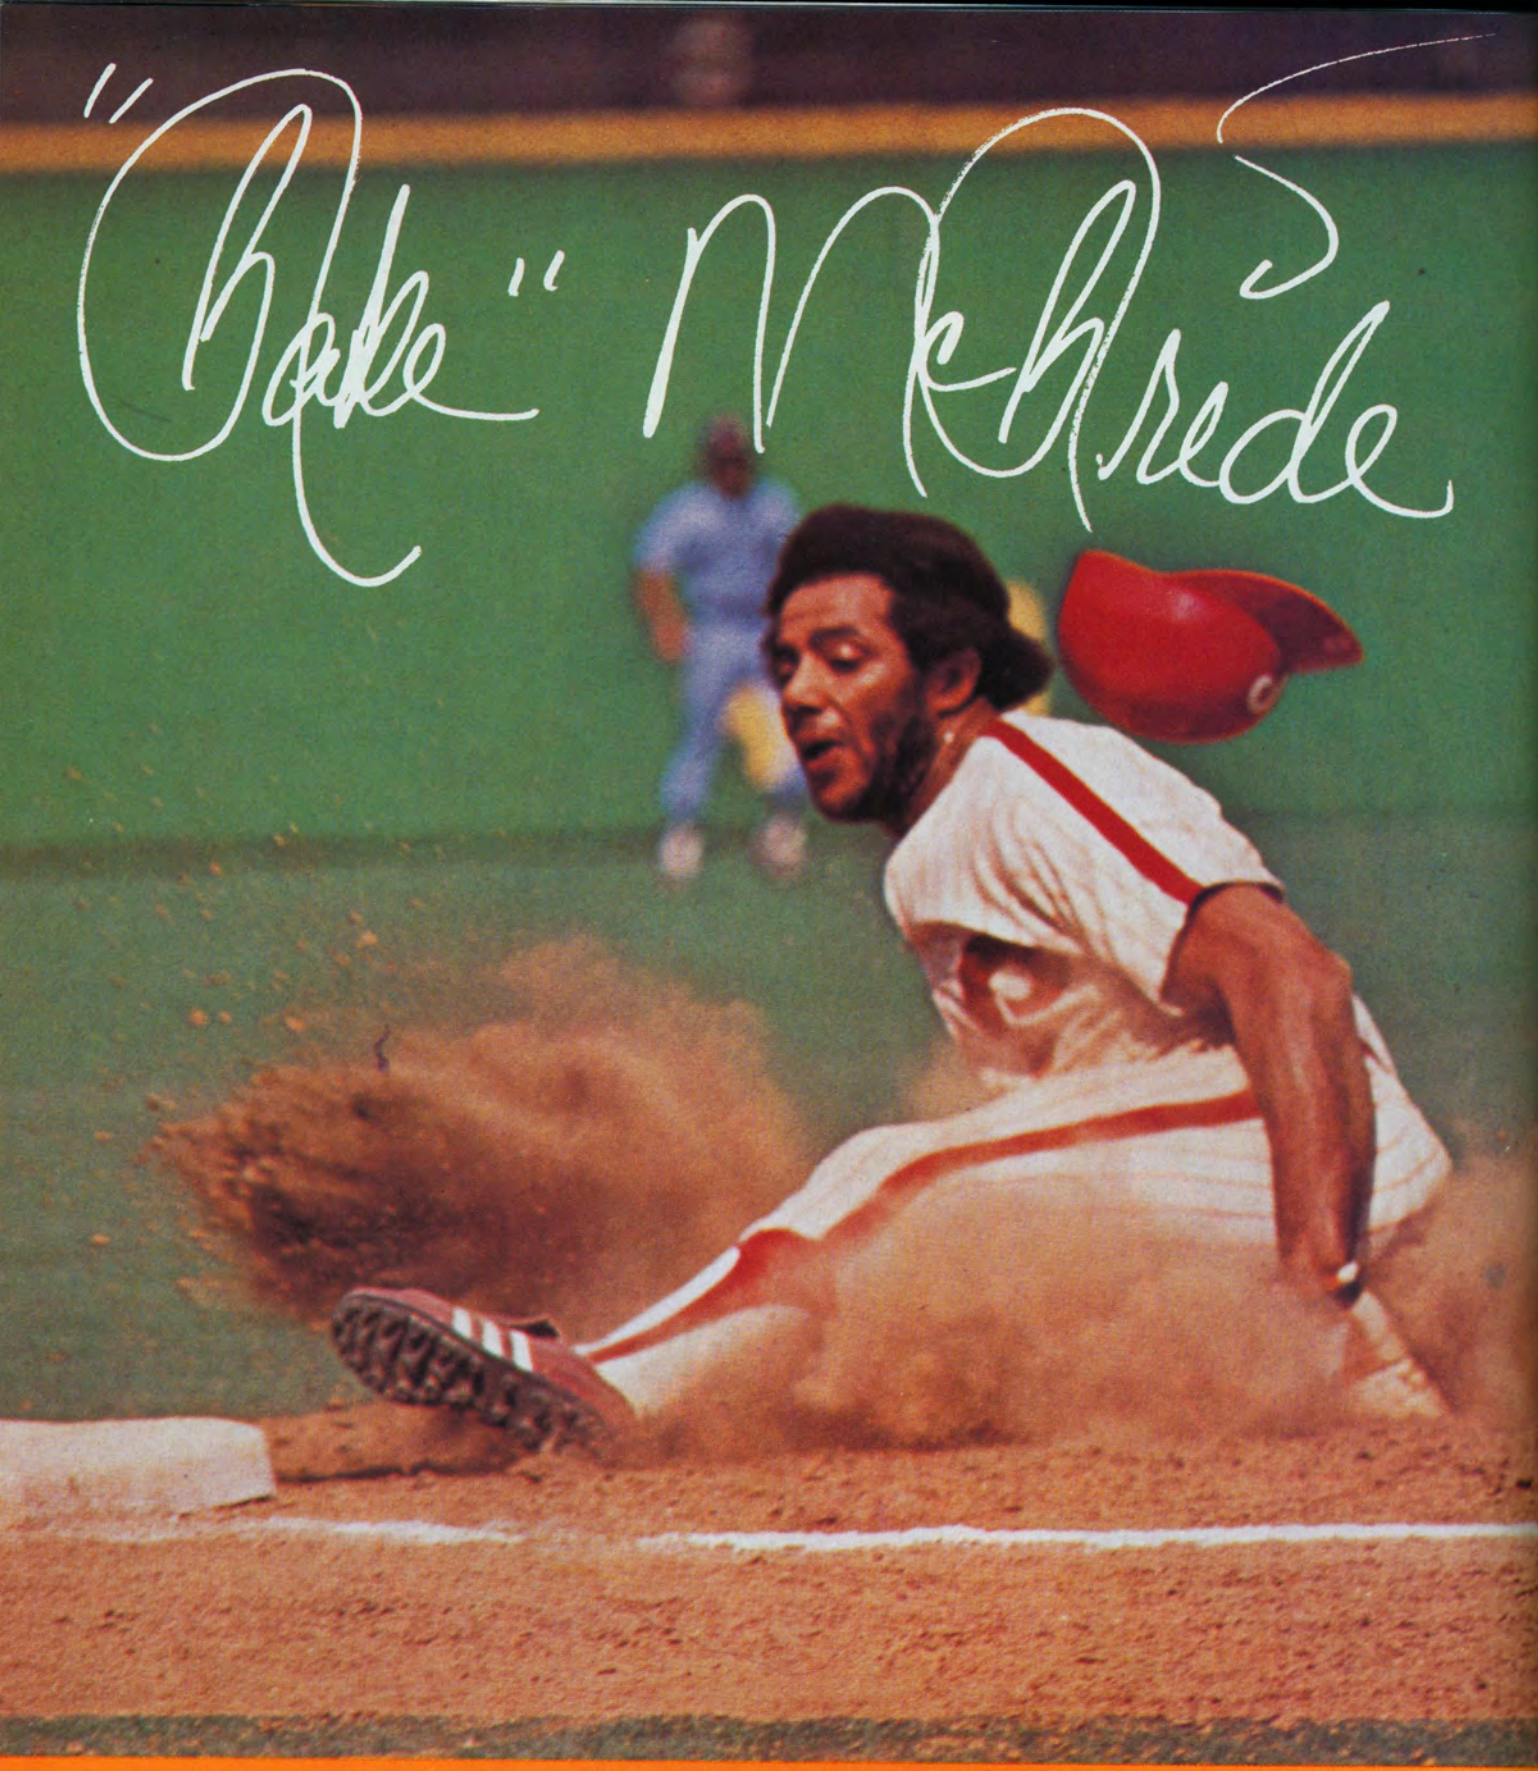
Greg Luzinski The Phillies could feel the season slipping away. The night before they had lost a doubleheader to the Pittsburgh Pirates, and although they needed just one win to clinch the Eastern Division, they found themselves trailing the Pirates again. A loss would set up the final game of the season as the clincher and anything could happen. The Phillies had blown a bases-loaded opportunity in the fifth inning and when Greg Luzinski came to the plate in the sixth inning there were two outs and two men on base and the Phils were behind 4-3. Lefthander Grant Jackson worked the count to 2-1 before he tried to sneak a pitch by "The Bull" on the inside part of the plate. Luzinski swung and nobody moved as the ball roared high into the left field seats and the Phillies were on their way to the playoffs. He is a quiet leader, the type of player admired by his teammates and others around the National League as the guy you look to for the big hit.



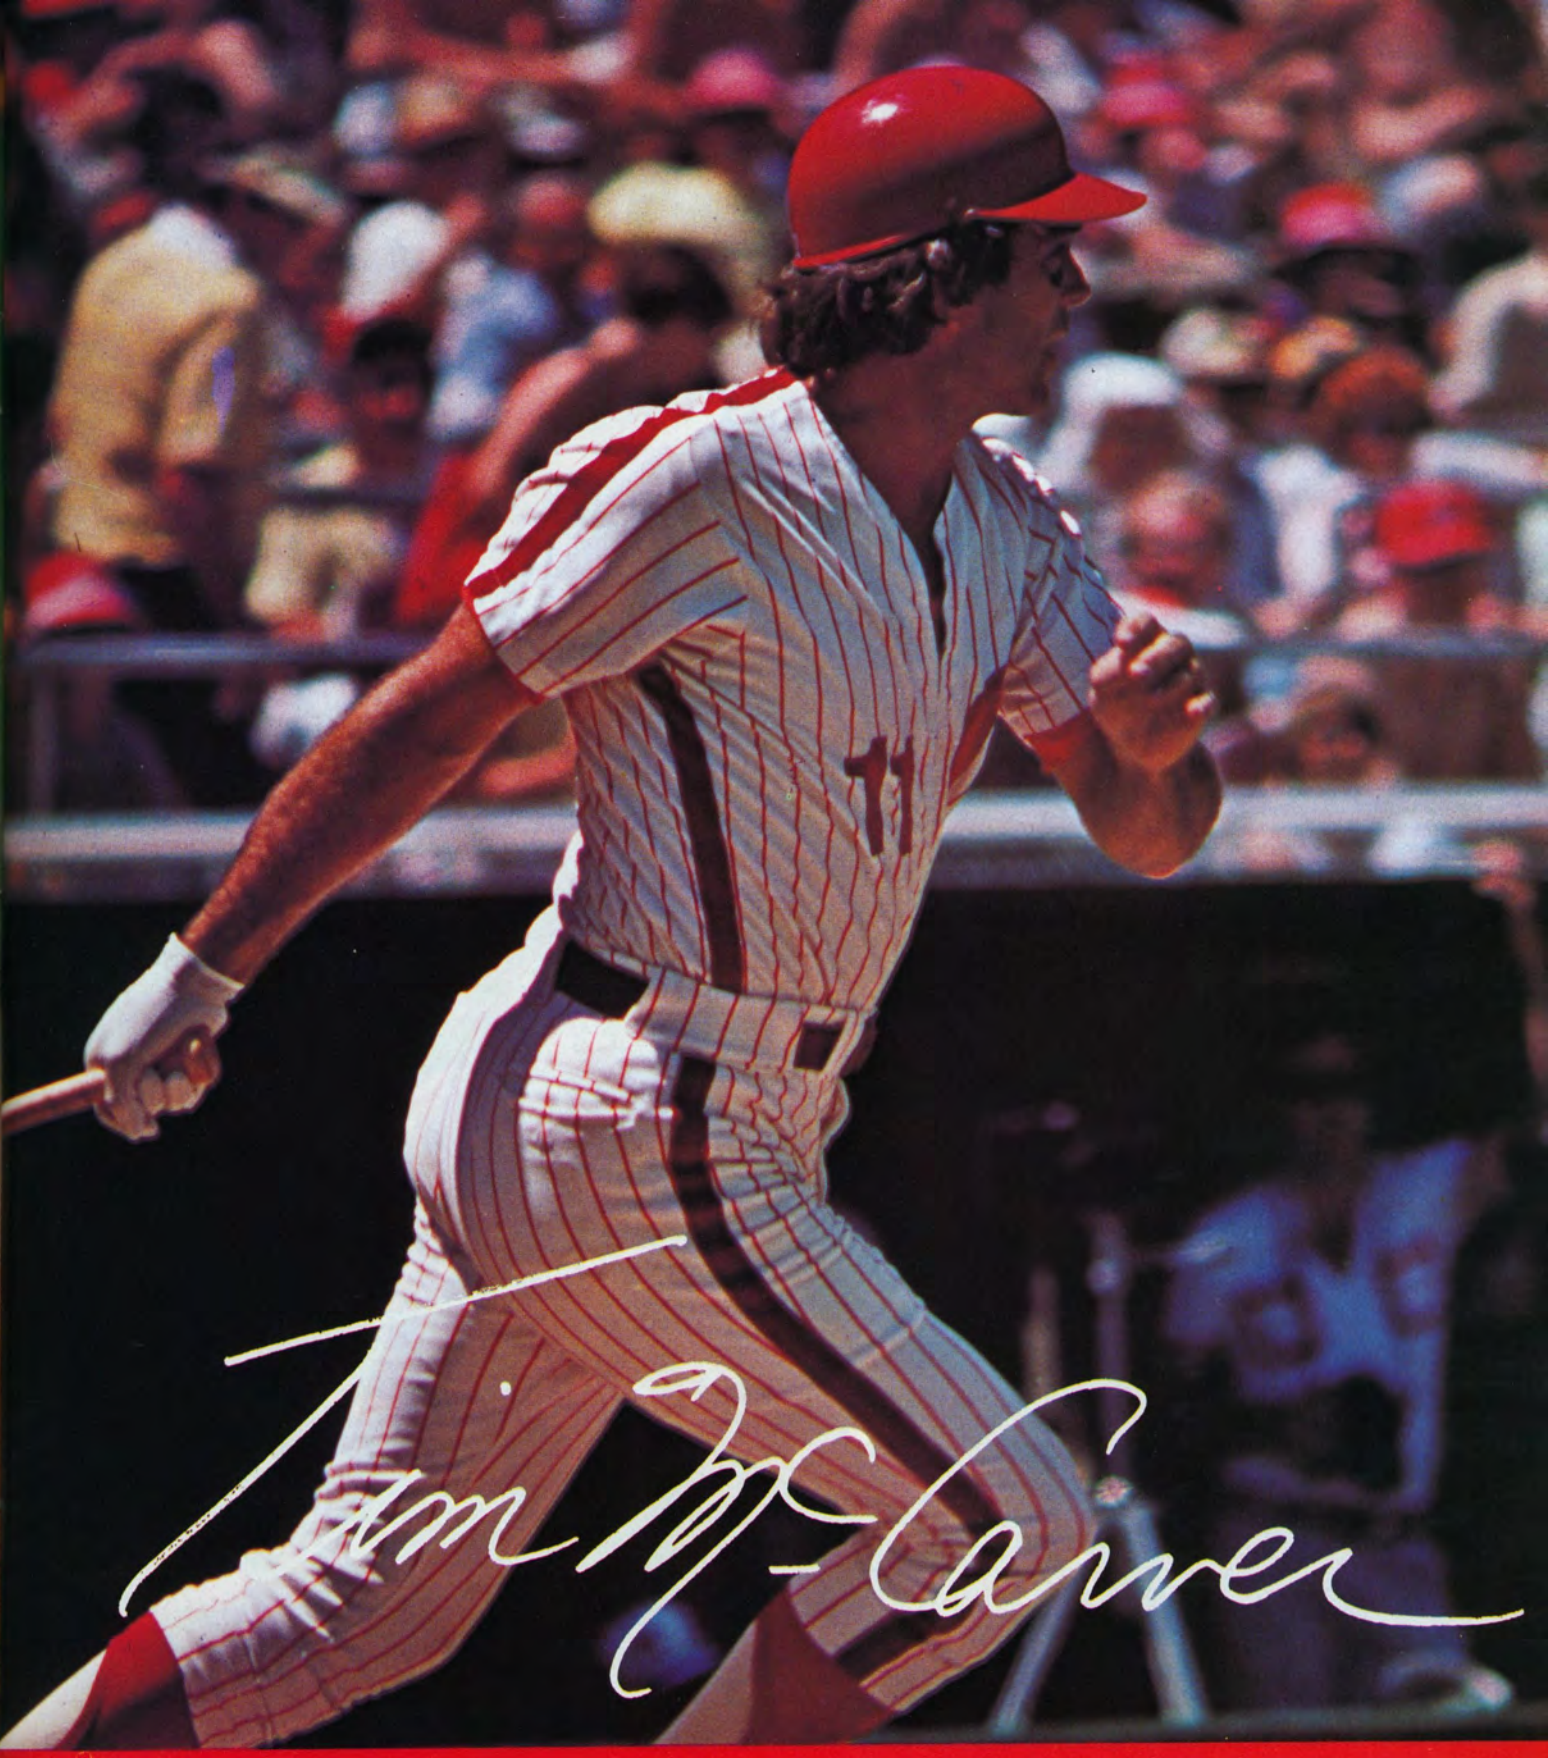
Rudy Meoli Paul Owens has always been a believer in having a strong, versatile bench. During trade negotiations with the Cubs over the winter concerning Manny Trillo, Owens asked the Chicago ball club a few times if Rudy Meoli, a small infielder, would be available. Time marched on and eventually the Cubs gave Meoli his release. Owens got on the phone quickly and invited Rudy to camp with the Phillies as a non-roster player. "He's a battler, can play second, short and third," Owens said. "He's got good speed and could be valuable as a pinch runner, too." Meoli impressed the Phillies brass in the spring and became a disciple of hitting instructor Billy DeMars. So, Rudy Meoli, the ex-Angel, ex-Cub, is around to provide middle infield insurance for the Phillies.



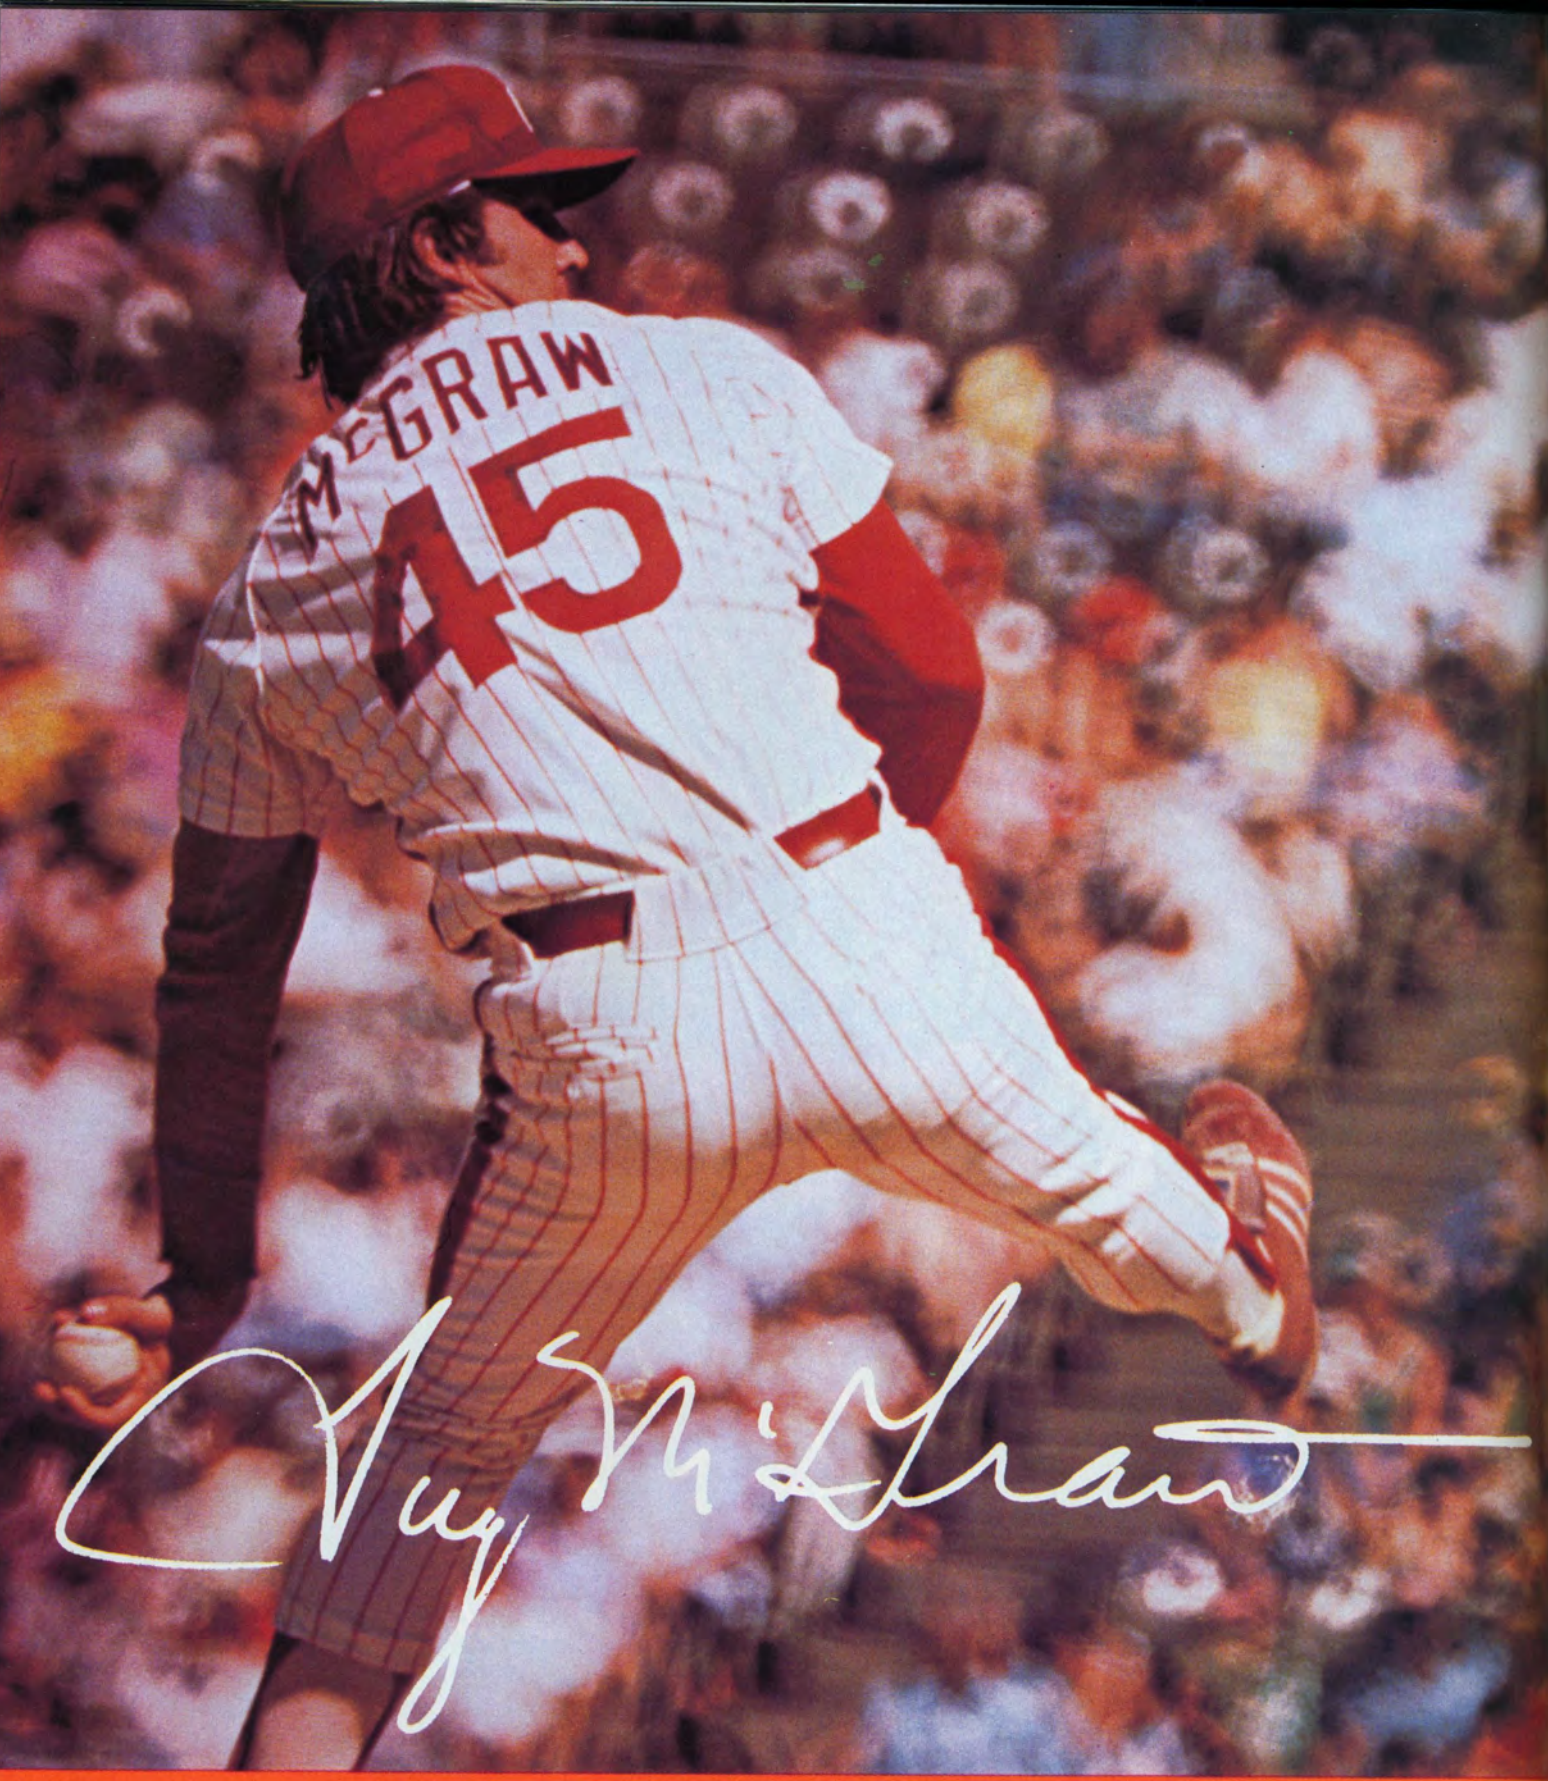
Garry Maddox He could have made a number of excuses about the line drive off the bat of Dusty Baker that glanced off his glove and fell gently to the Dodger Stadium turf last October. Maybe the ball got lost in the sea of white shirts. How about the tricky shadows prevalent at that time of the day. The smog was brutal that day and it was hard to see, but after Bill Russell had lined a base hit to centerfield to end the Phillies dreams for another year, Garry Maddox stood patiently in the glare of the television lights and said the ball was a routine line drive that he missed and was something he would have to forget. The Philadelphia fans have rallied around Maddox during the off-season and the four-time Gold Glove winner has worked very hard to get ready to have a great year and make that dark day in Los Angeles nothing but a faded memory.



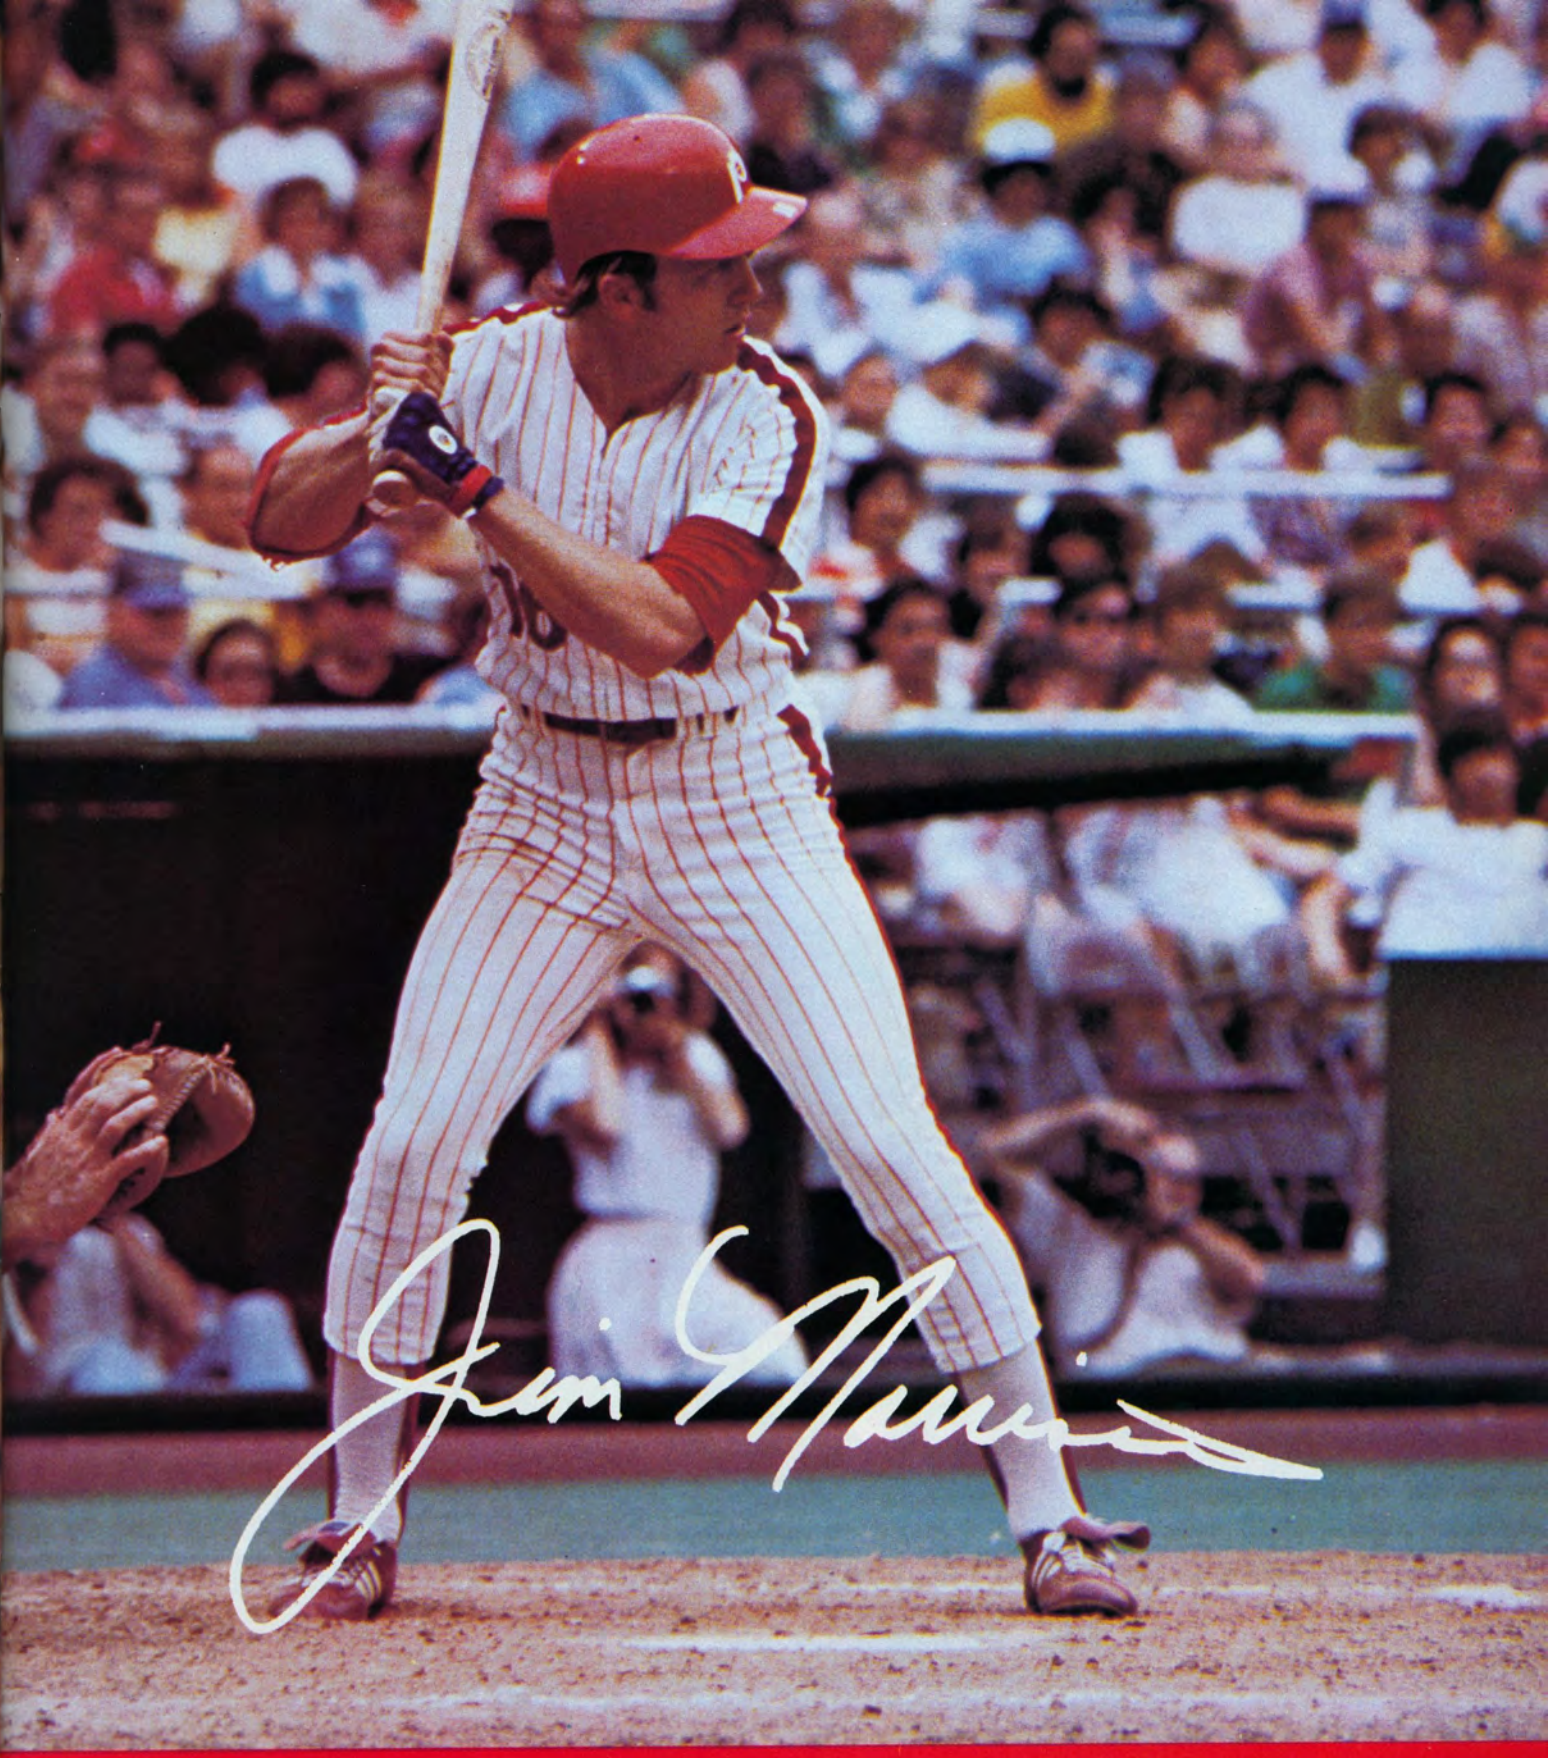
Bake McBride How many players can lay claim to a .300 batting average after five years in the major leagues? Well one of them is Phillies outfielder Bake McBride, who slumped to .269 last year in an injury-plagued season, but still owns a lifetime batting average of .305. Bake came to the Phillies in June 1977 and sparked the Phillies to their second Eastern Division title taking over the important leadoff position in the batting order and hitting .339 in a Philadelphia uniform with a career high 15 home runs. He's an important part of the Phillies attack supplying speed to the lineup while doing a good job in the outfield. The Phillies are looking for McBride to rebound from his down year in 1978 and return to the form that has made him one of baseball's most consistent offensive performers.



Tim McCarver Tim McCarver has spent 16 years in the major leagues and along with a collection of bumps and bruises, he has developed a tremendous sense of humor that can help a team get through a long season. Like the time a civic group named a high school stadium in his native Memphis, Tenn., Tim McCarver Memorial Stadium, McCarver deadpanned to his teammates, "they named it for my arm." Though he takes a great deal of teasing from his teammates, he is a widely respected professional who has helped the Phillies win a number of games with his attitude and leadership both on and off the field. Known now as Steve Carlton's catcher and as a valuable pinch hitter, McCarver remains an important part of the Philadelphia Phillies.

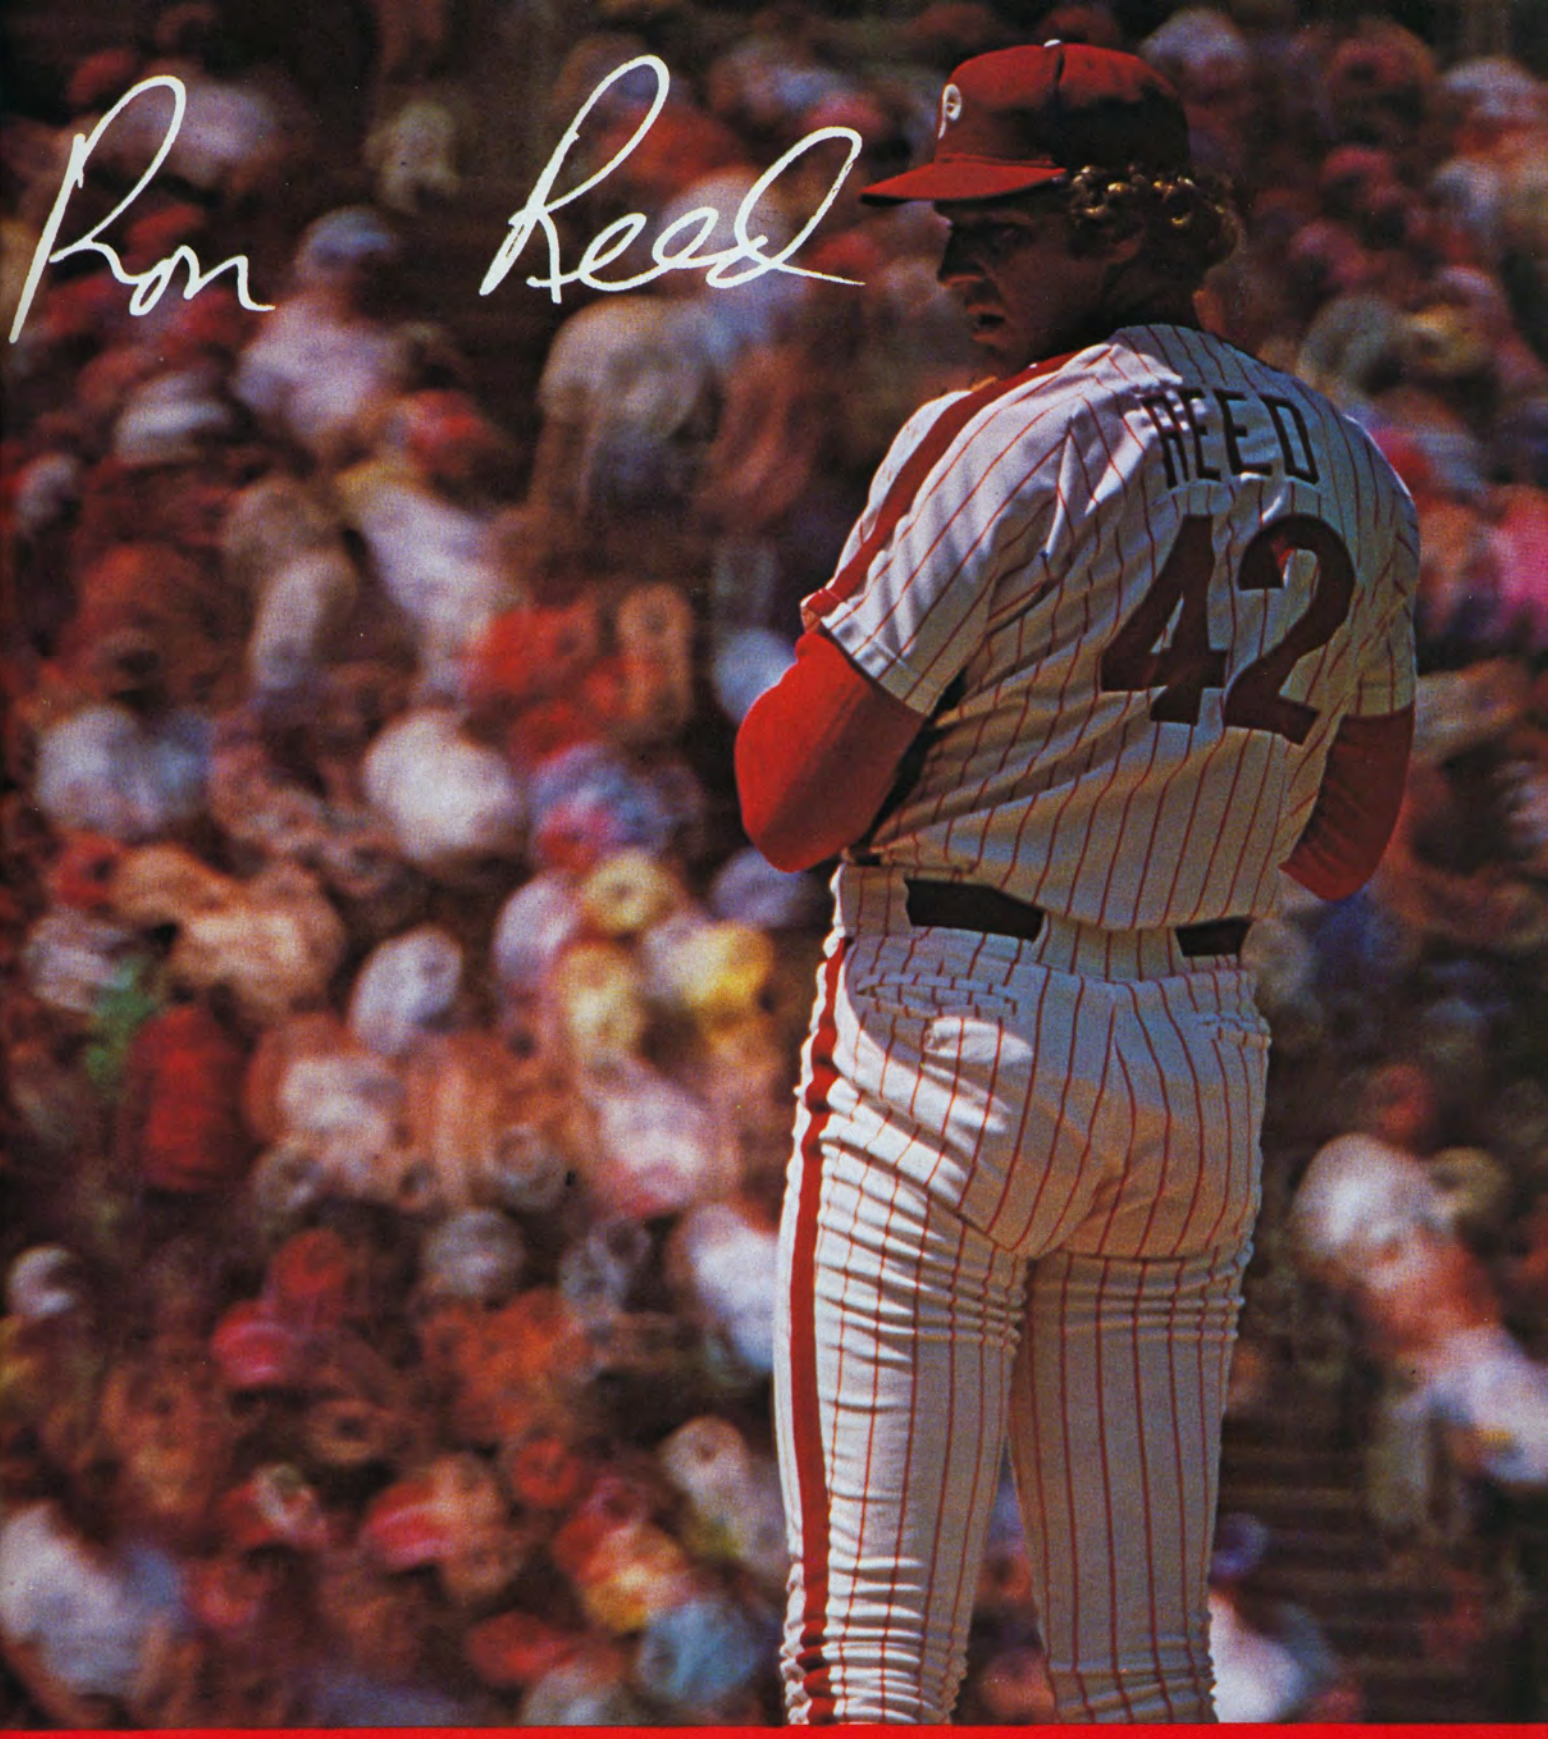


Tug McGraw Tug McGraw has the reputation as a flake but get beyond the label and you'll find one of baseball's most interesting and intelligent personalities. He has the ability to put events into perspective and can often times be a calm voice in a storm although he is a highly emotional personality himself. Since coming to the Phillies in a winter deal in 1974, McGraw has given the Phillies tremendous stability out of the bullpen and has been the quality lefthanded reliever all contending teams must have to compete. Last year he had eight wins and nine saves to go along with a 3.20 ERA. Tugger also was called upon to start his first game since 1974 and responded with a strong effort even though he lost the game to Montreal.

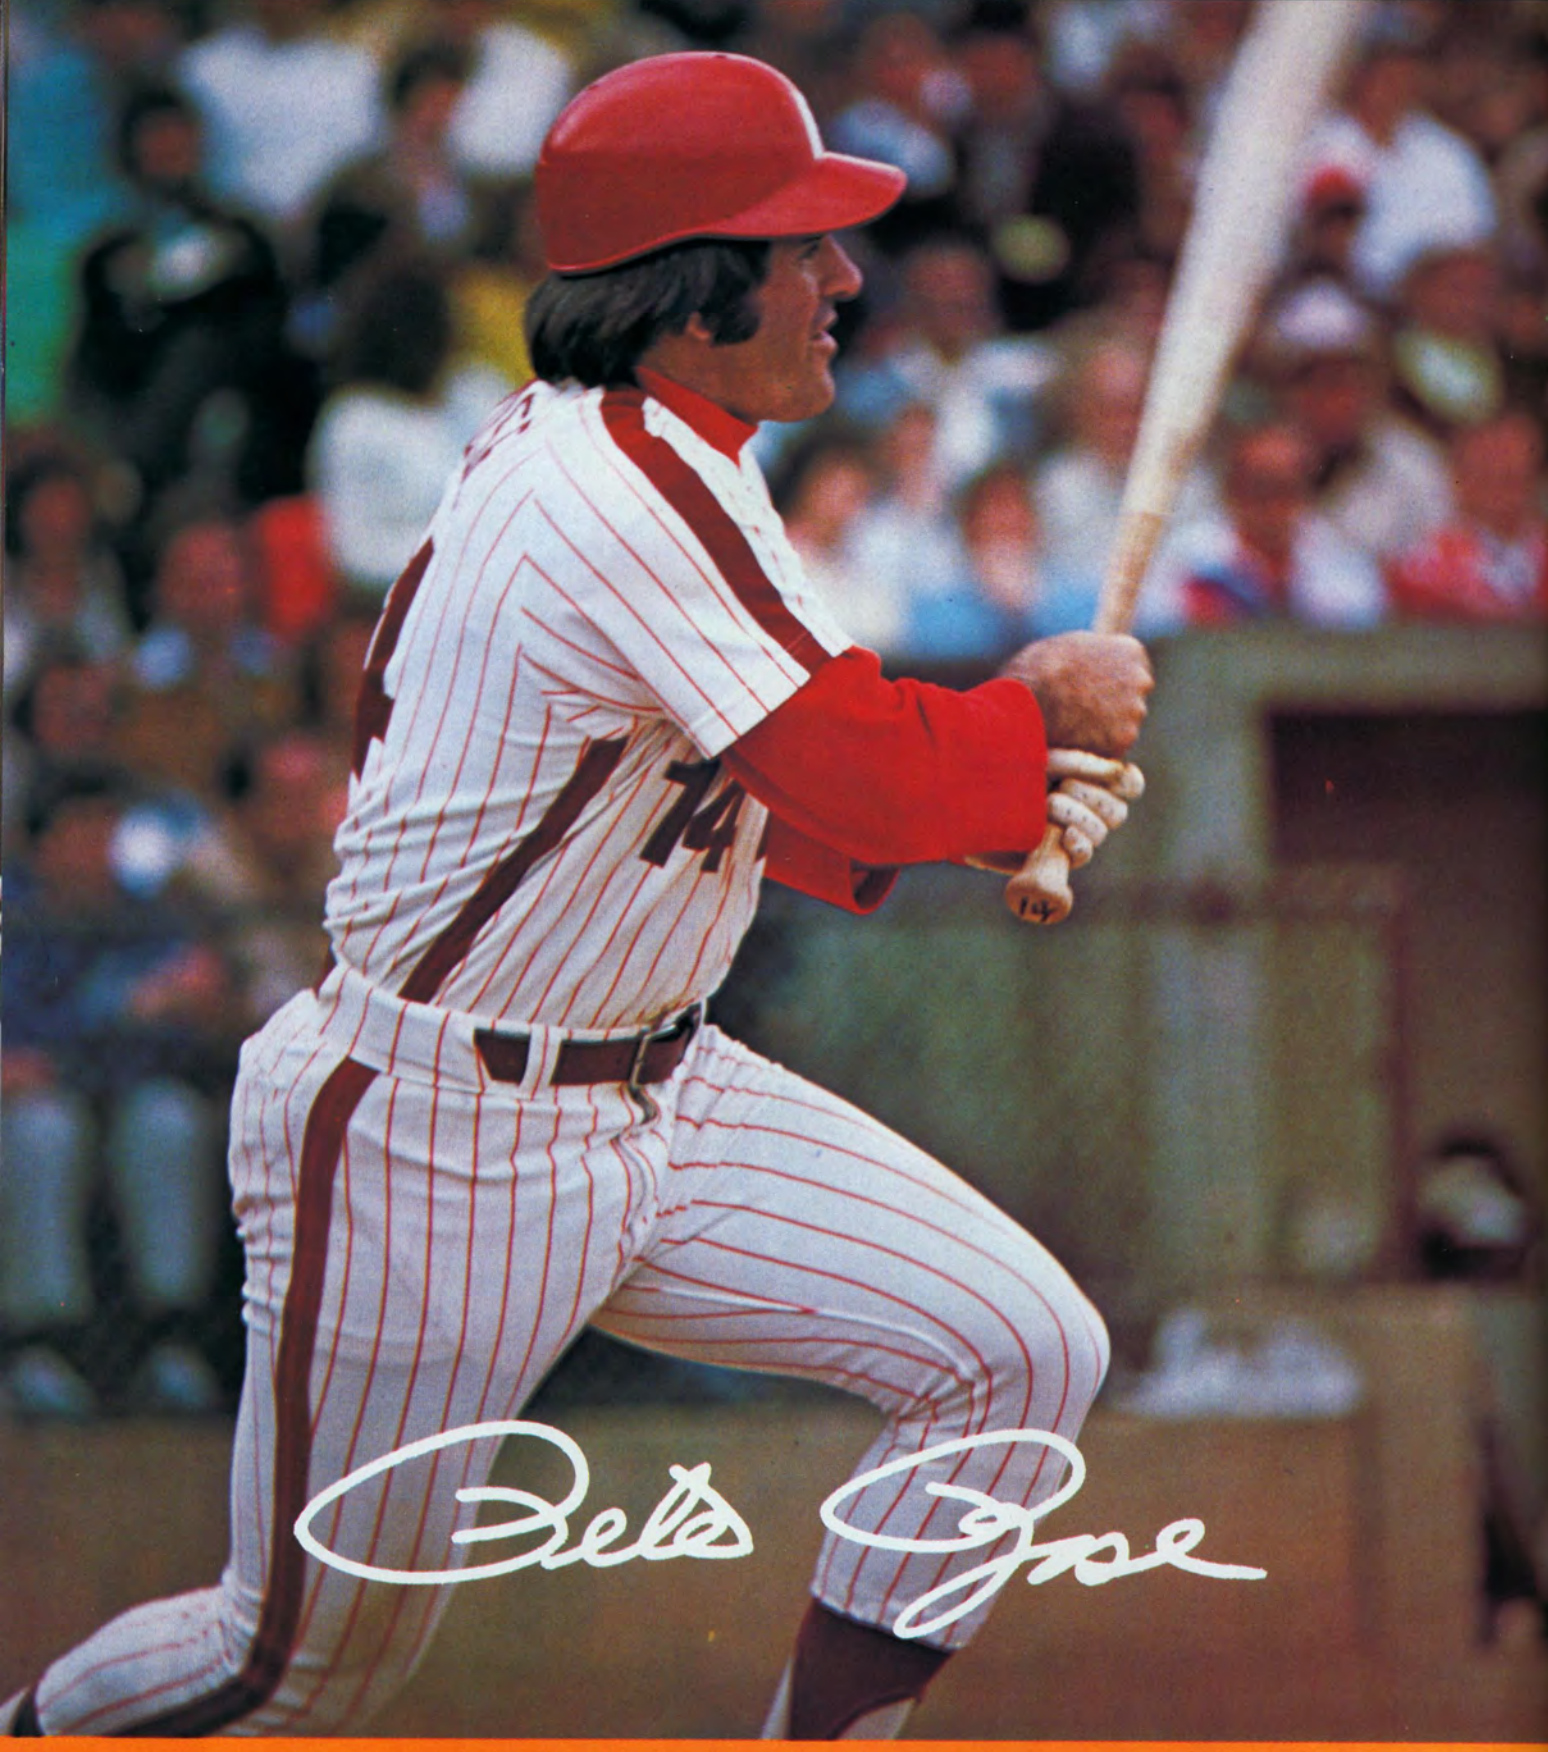


Jim Morrison How would you like to be learning a new position in the relative obscurity of Triple-A Baseball and all of a sudden find yourself thrust into that position in front of hugh crowds in the major leagues? Such was the case of Jim Morrison last season who was learning to play second base at Oklahoma City when Ted Sizemore broke his hand in a late April game and the Phillies recalled Morrison. He worked hard every day at the position but found that the transformation from third to second was difficult. Always a fine minor league hitter, his offense also suffered although Jim did manage to hit three home runs including a game-winner off Vida Blue.

Dave Rader The Phillies are lucky to have a number one catcher like Bob Boone who can catch 130 games with little trouble. The Phils also have capable Tim McCarver to catch Steve Carlton. However, the ballclub now feels very fortunate to have added another veteran catcher in lefthanded hitting Dave Rader who came to Philadelphia in the late February deal with Chicago. Rader was THE SPORTING NEWS National League Rookie of the Year in 1972 and had several fine seasons with the Giants before he was traded to St. Louis and Chicago. He has batted .291 twice in the majors and suffered through an off-season with the Cubs last year hitting just .203. The Phillies are happy to have a player like Rader on their ballclub and feel he will be a valuable addition to the 1979 team.

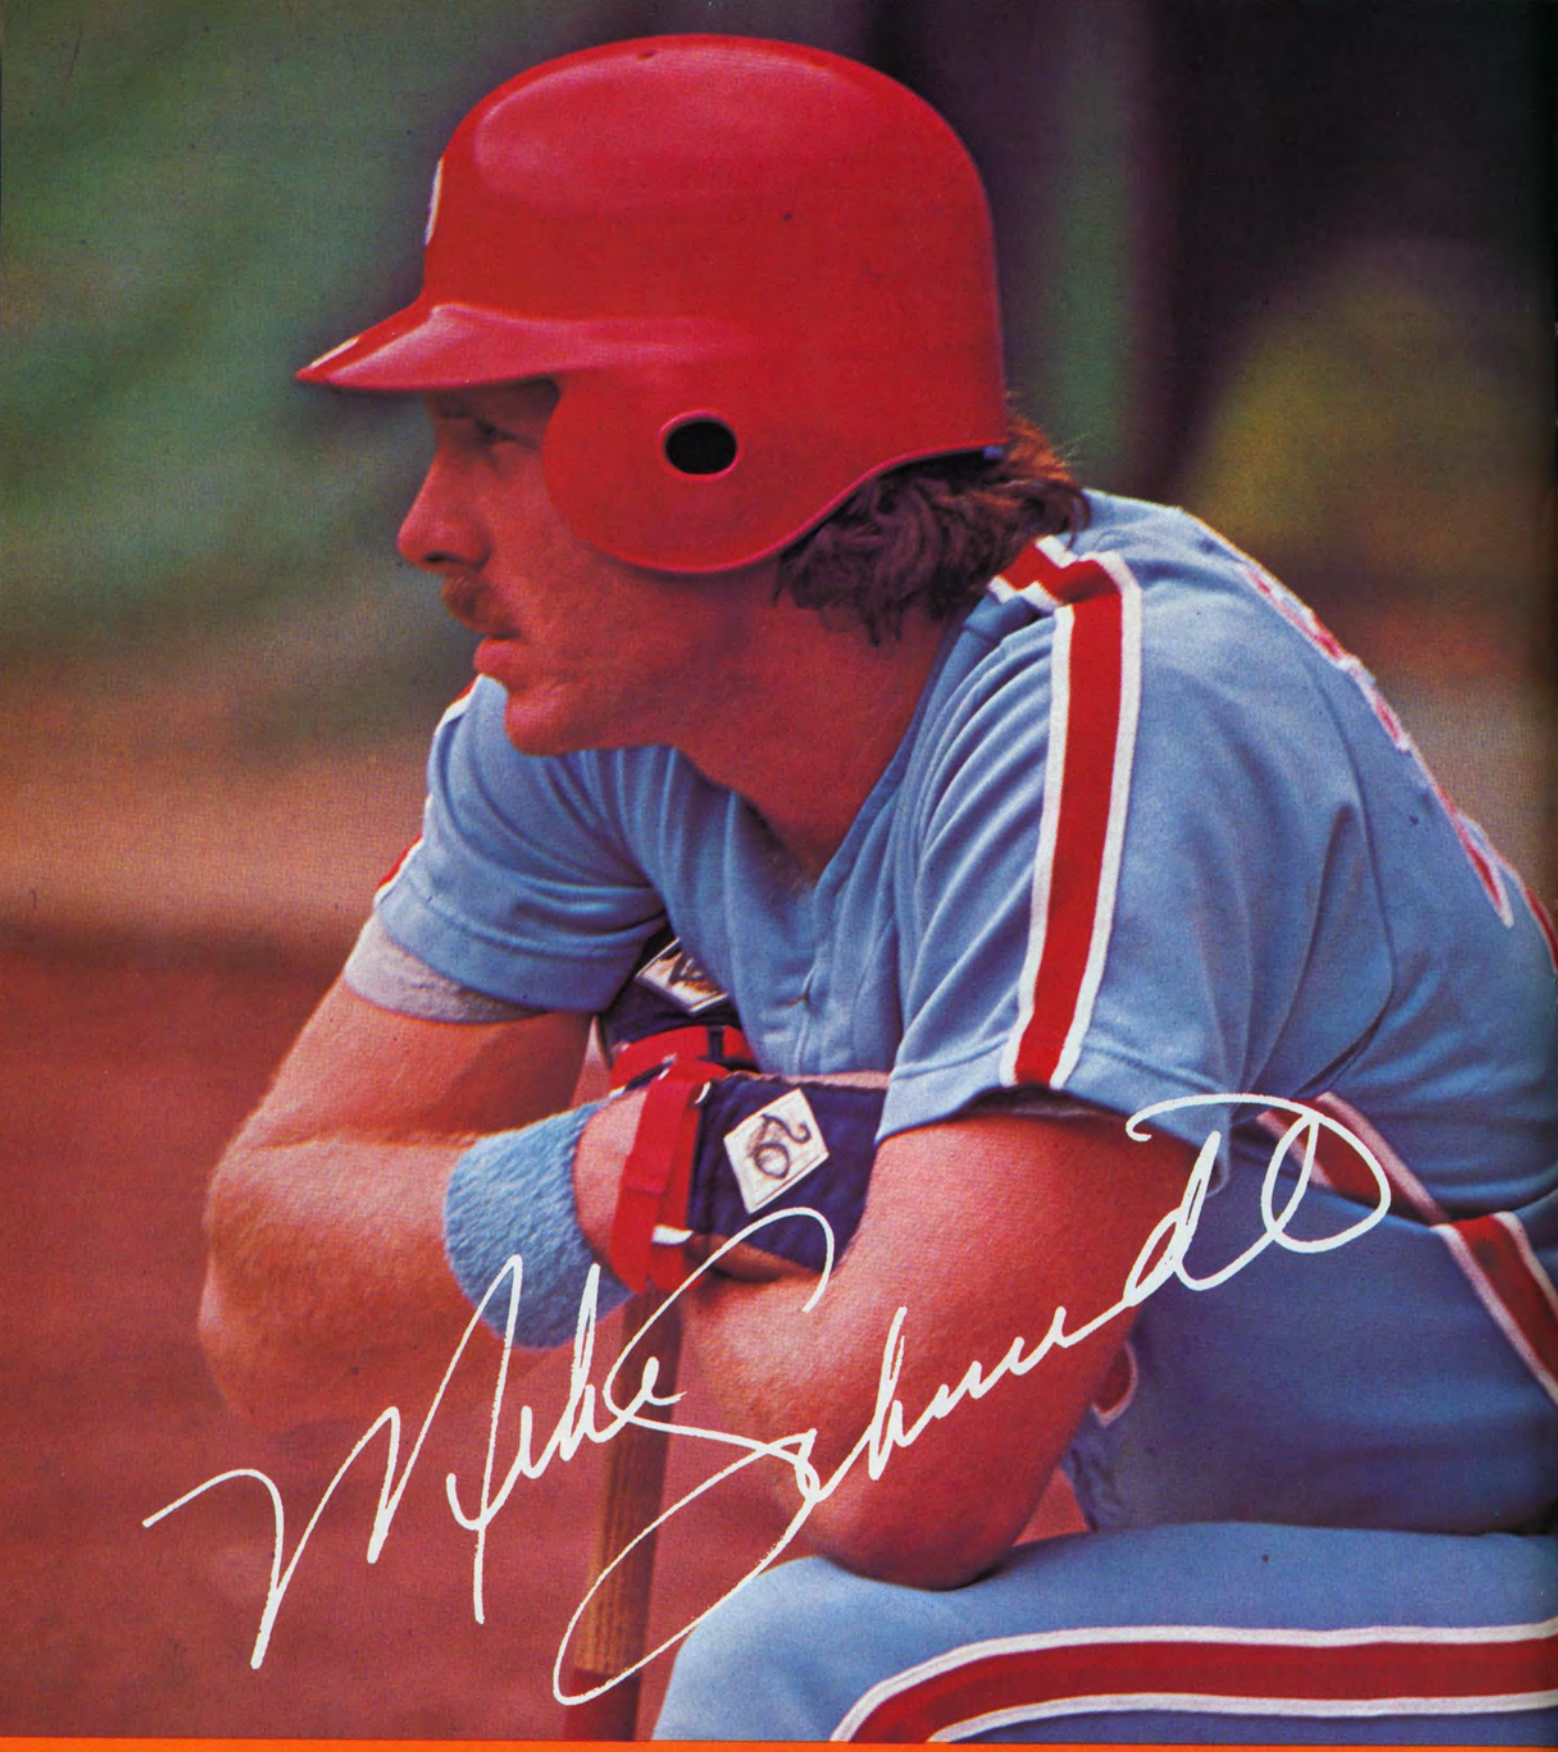


Rod Reed Whenever a team gets involved in a pennant race, the difference many times can be the bullpen. Last year when the Pittsburgh Pirates were nipping at the Phillies heels in September, Danny Ozark was lucky to have big Ron Reed coming out of the pen to help the Phils to their third straight Eastern Division title. Known to his teammates as "Slinky," Reed appeared in 16 games in September, picked up six saves and had a 1.29 ERA in many clutch performances during games the Phillies had to win. A starter almost his entire career, Reed has developed into one of the league's premier late-inning relievers the past three seasons picking up 46 saves for the Phillies during the three impressive seasons he has been in a Philadelphia uniform.

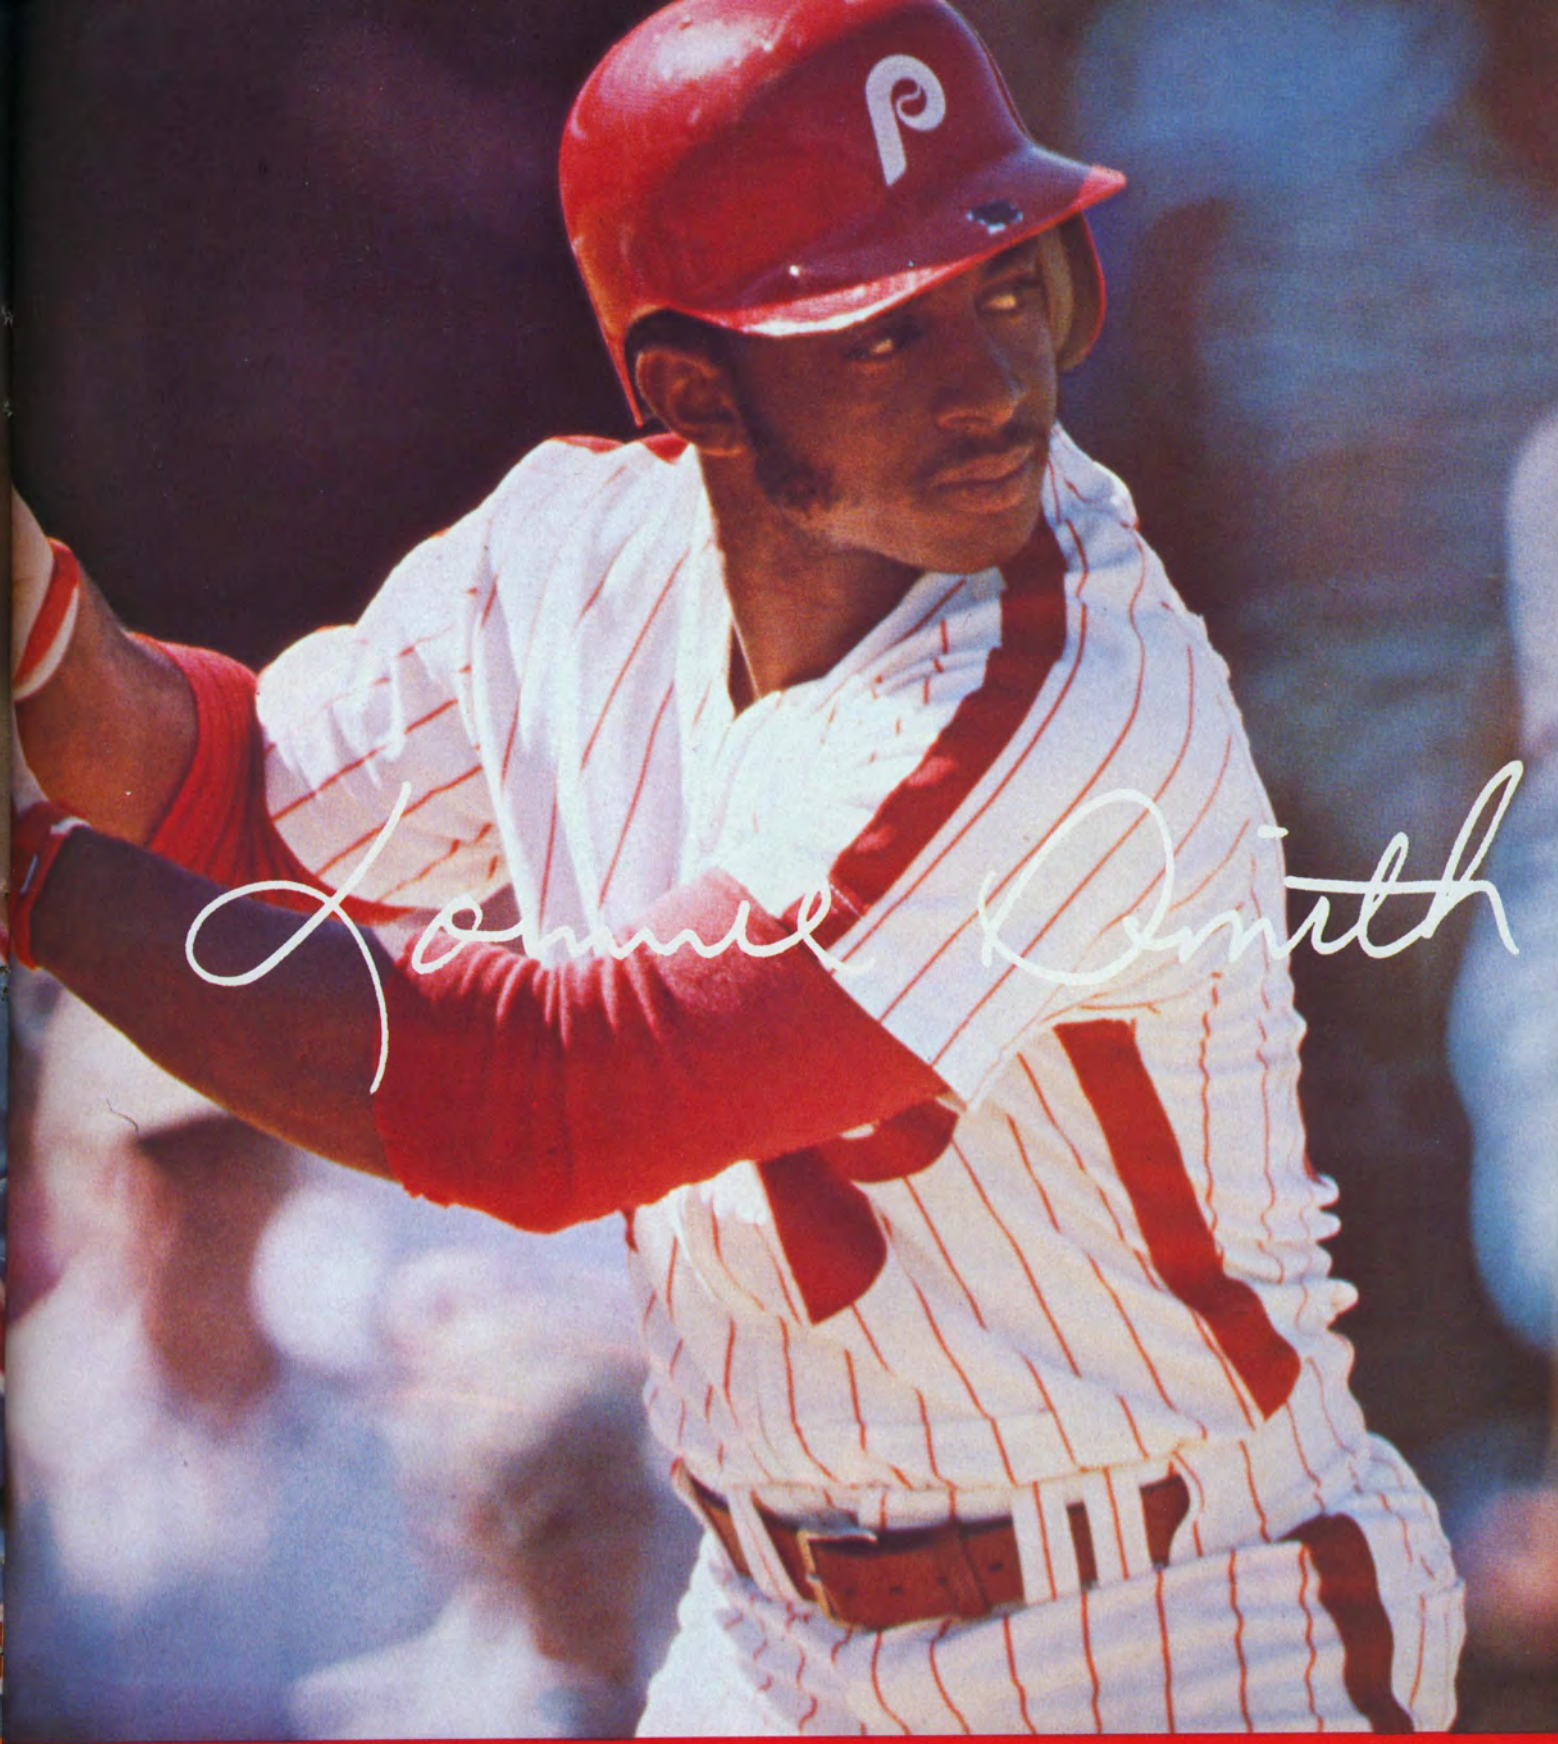


Pete Rose The style is all his. The diving headfirst slide, the perpetual stream of conversation directed at opposing players, fans and umpires, the smirks that say a thousand words, and the way he runs the bases with his batting helmet jammed onto his head. For many people he has been the man who best exemplifies the game of baseball, and like him or not, everybody respects Philadelphia's newest sports hero, Pete Rose. Last summer Rose captivated the sports world as he collected his 3,000th hit in May, and later in the year as he chased Joe DiMaggio's supposedly unattainable hitting streak of 56 games. Pete set a modern-day National League record of 44 straight before he was stopped in Atlanta. At the end of the season this 16 year veteran, who has hit .300 or better 13 times in the last 14 years, opted for his free agency and the Phillies signed him to a four-year contract.

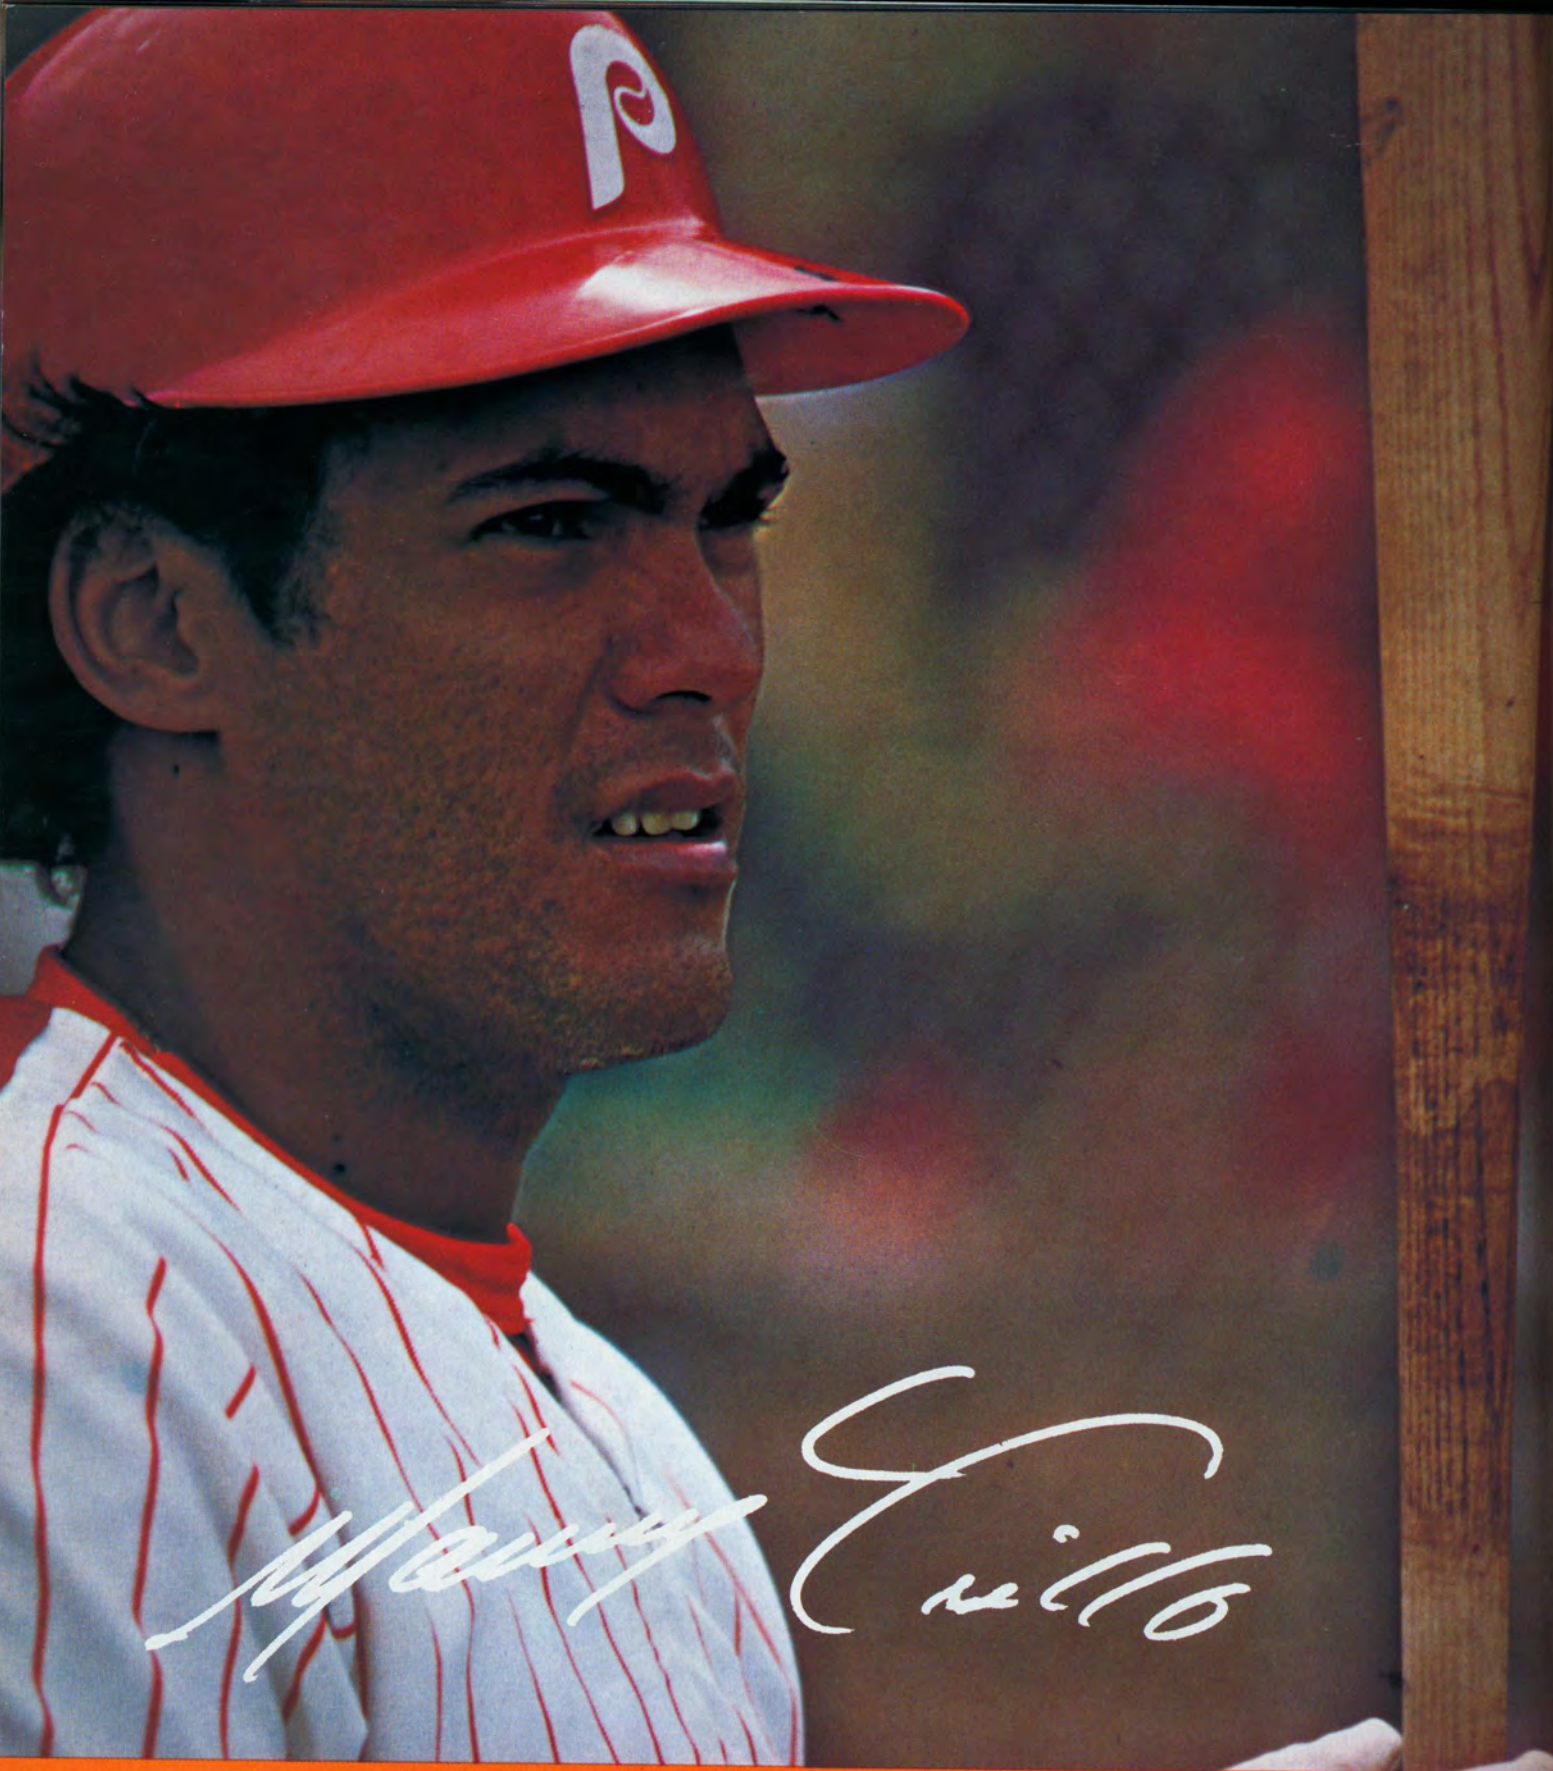
Dick Ruthven Since taking over as General Manager of the Phillies, Paul Owens has made many trades that have helped the ball club. But Owens always would admit that the one player he hated to trade was Dick Ruthven. So when it became apparent last year that Ruthven was available, "The Pope" went after the young righthander and though he paid a heavy price in sending Gene Garber to Atlanta, felt he had a starting pitcher that would make him proud. Ruthven, who had struggled with numerous problems in his first stay with the Phillies, returned as a mature young man who went out and won 13 games in half a season with the Phillies. Dick Ruthven wanted to return to Philadelphia and Paul Owens wanted him back. It's a story with a happy ending.



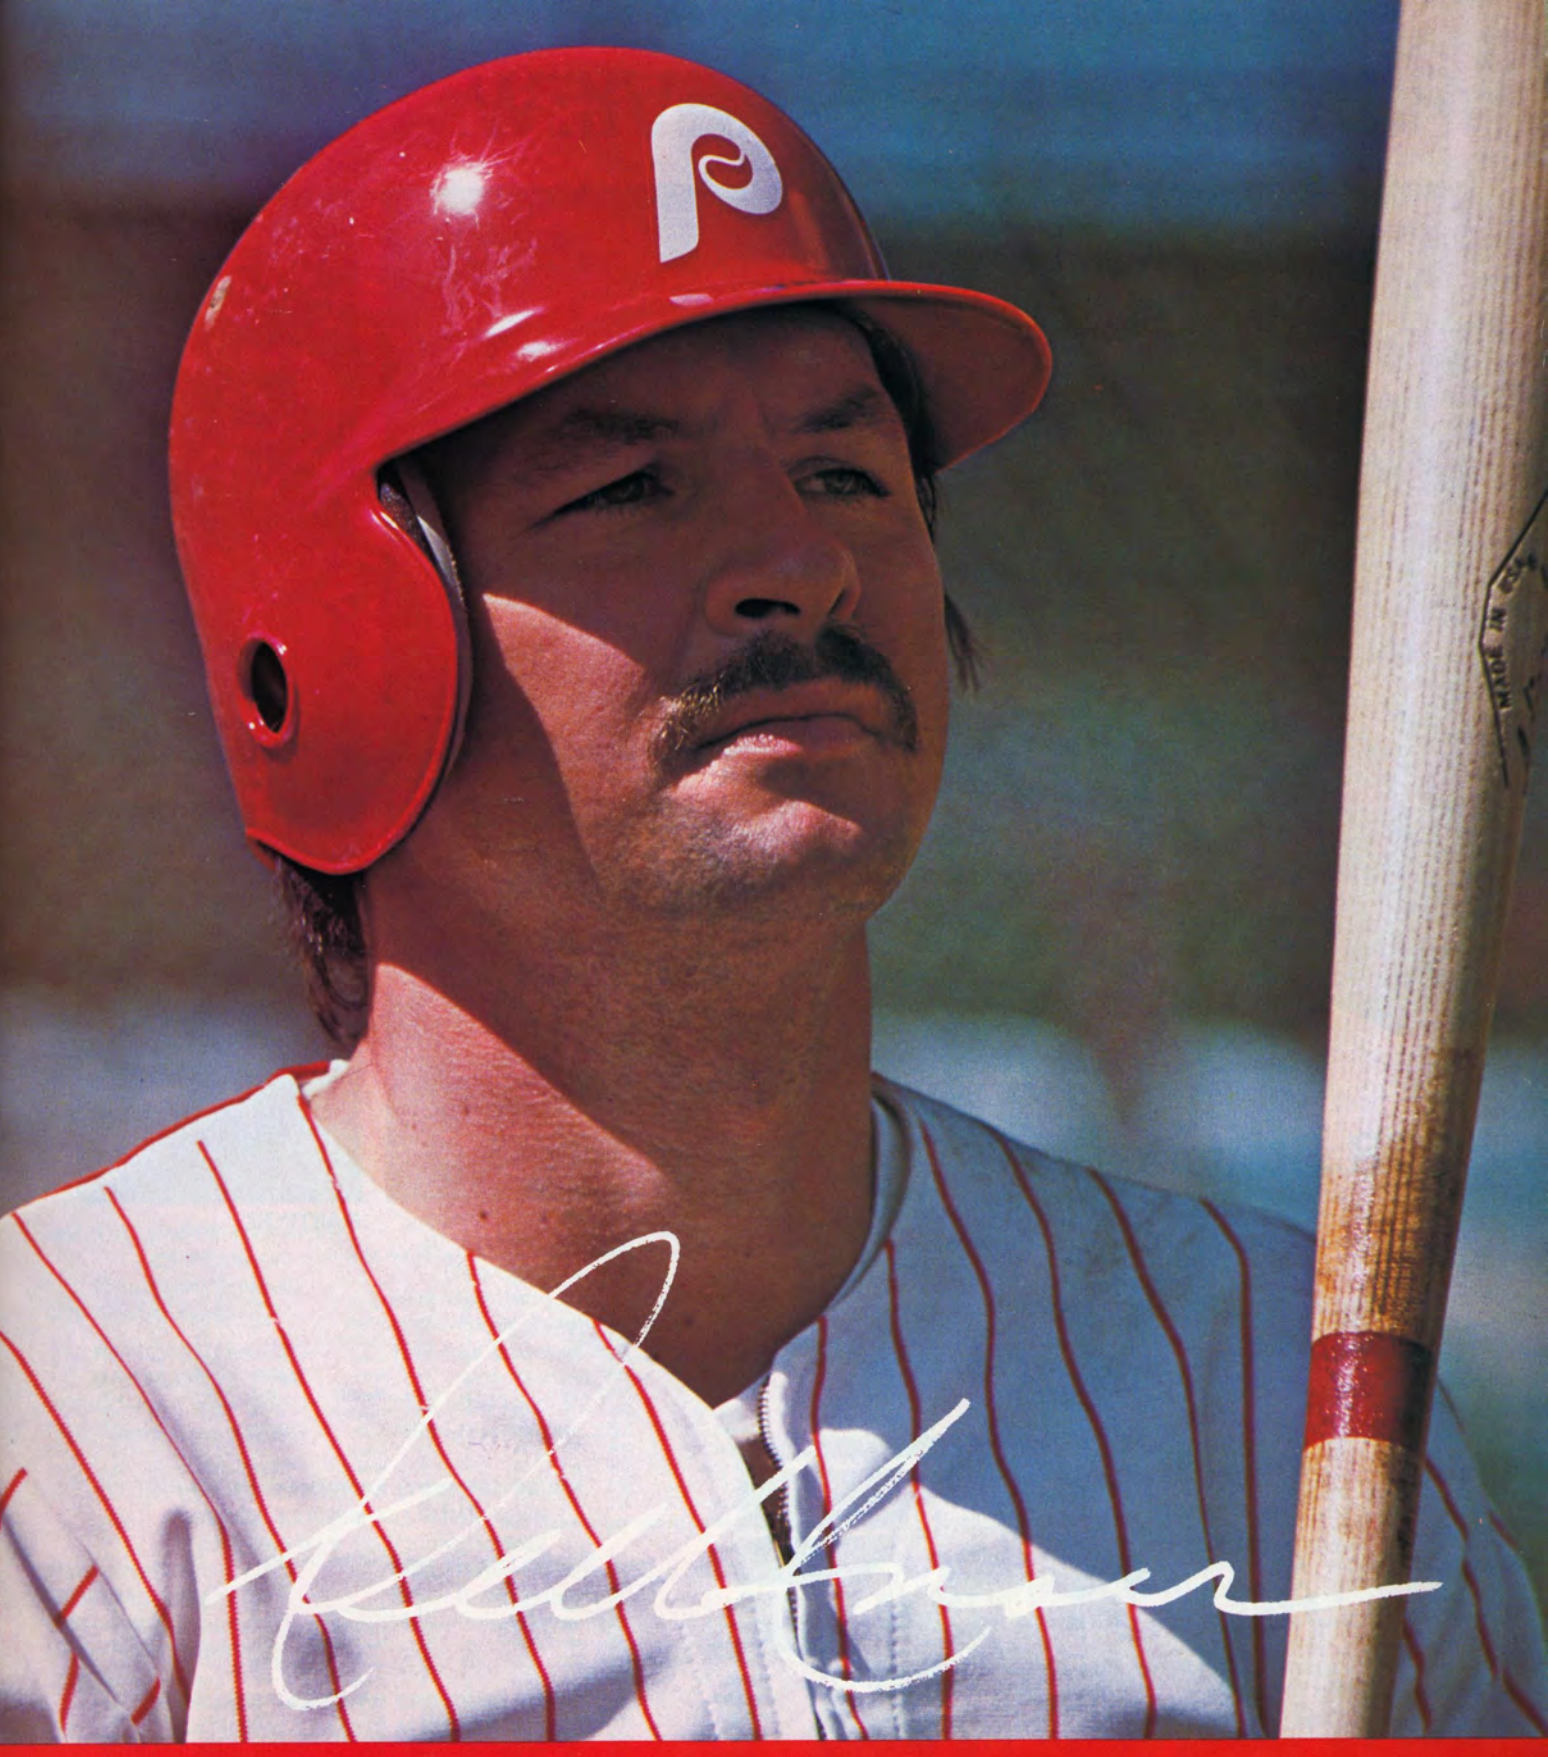
Mike Schmidt One of the problems that goes hand in hand with success is that people expect a certain performance level at all times. Mike Schmidt led the major leagues in home runs three straight years. One afternoon in Chicago he slammed four consecutive home runs, something no other National Leaguer had done in 82 years. He has won three consecutive Gold Gloves. But controversy seems to follow the Dayton, Ohio, native. After consecutive years of 36, 36, 38 and 38 home runs, Mike's round trippers dropped off to 21 last year and the boos became his constant companion. Schmidt is a multi-talented athlete who sometimes makes the game of baseball look too easy causing some fans to think he doesn't care. Actually he is an intense competitor who is determined to play up to the high standards he and Philadelphia baseball fans have set for him.



Lonnie Smith Whenever the subject of the Phillies farm system comes up, the one player everyone talks about as a definite major league prospect is outfielder Lonnie Smith. Drafted number one by the Phillies in 1974, the 23-year-old Californian has averaged .304 with 41 steals in his five year professional career. He stole four bases with the Phillies during a brief September recall last year and impressed everyone with his great speed. Smith was having a great spring training last year before an illness curtailed his activity and he finally was sent to Oklahoma City where he led the American Association with 66 steals and finished second in runs scored with 103. With Jerry Martin traded to Chicago, the Phillies will be looking to shore up their outfield and may have to look no farther than Lonnie Smith.



Manny Trillo Take a poll of baseball experts and you'll find that the best defensive second baseman in the National League is Manny Trillo. The 28-year-old Venezuelan started his baseball career as a catcher on a team that was managed by Phillies Minor League Director Dallas Green and included a promising young slugger named Greg Luzinski. Since that time, Trillo has played briefly for Oakland and consistently for the Chicago Cubs leading all NL second basemen in assists for four straight years and total chances two straight. He has one of baseball's strongest arms and can turn the doubleplay with anyone in the game. The Phillies already have the best shortstop in baseball in Larry Bowa. He and Manny Trillo should make a very exciting double play combination.



Del Unser One of the areas Paul Owens wanted to strengthen on the 1979 Phillies was the bench. So, when ex-Phil Del Unser played out his option, Owens quickly put in a claim for the veteran outfielder. Unser can serve the Phillies in several ways—pinch hitting, playing all three outfield positions and also playing first base. He's a guy who comes to play and was very popular with the fans when he played in Philadelphia during the 1973 and 1974 seasons. The addition of Unser plus Greg Gross and Dave Rader have certainly shored up the Phillies left-handed hitting reserve corps.

A DAY AT THE VET MEANS SOMETHING FOR EVERY PHANATIC!

A Game in the Life of Phillie Phanatic

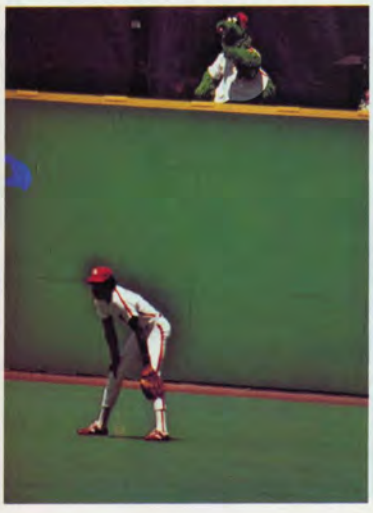
You have noticed the strange, new green thing among us. In 1978 the Phillie Phanatic became a part of every baseball game that was played at the Vet. He has made his presence known.

. . . with some pre-game mocking of our phabulous heroes, a pitcher, a catcher and hitter like the Bull.

. . . among a group of friends who discover, "Hey, he's one of us."

. . . making the fifth inning ritual a choreographed event.

. . . providing a little company and support for the lonely outfielder.



. . . first in the hearts of the kids, and first to lead the cheers when the final out marks another Phillies victory.

1978:

3000 Hits

The Riverfront Stadium clock read 9:22 p.m. when Pete Rose stepped to the plate to face Montreal's Steve Rogers. One more base hit and Rose would become the 13th player in the long history of baseball to reach 3,000 hits.

Before a minute had passed, the lefthanded hitter lined Rogers' pitch to left field for a single and pandemonium broke out.

Teammates rushed the field to congratulate Rose who stood at first base with ex-teammate and his close friend, Tony Perez. Photographers swarmed the field. Rose, taking off his cap, waved to the crowd. The exuberant Rose hugged Perez while a thunderous ovation went on for five minutes.

"The longer and louder they cheered, the more choked up I got," admitted Rose. Pete's wife, Karolyn, sitting in the stands with their daughter, Fawn and son, Petey, did cry.

In typical Pete Rose fashion, he said after the game, "I knew the ball would go to the Hall of Fame. I wanted a clean hit so fans could read the signature of Chub Feeney (National League president) on it."

Only 12 others had ever gotten 3,000 but Rose did it quicker. His 3,000th came in his 16th major league season, an even more amazing feat.

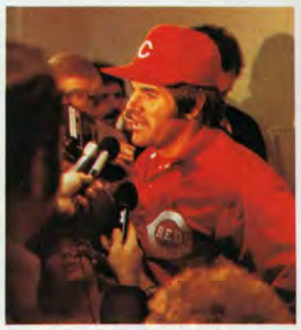
THE YEAR OF PETE ROSE



44 In A Row

Records are a very big part of baseball, more than in any other sport. Players are remembered and judged by their records.

Fans spend hours talking about records. It was generally agreed that the one record which would never be broken was Joe DiMaggio's hitting streak. The great New York Yankees outfielder compiled an amazing streak of 56 consecutive games back in 1941.

But, last summer every baseball fan in the world was caught up in Pete Rose. Mr. Charlie Hustle of the Cincinnati Reds put a streak together and really gave Joe D. a scare.

Born on April 14, No. 14 singled twice off the Chicago Cubs Dave Roberts on June 14. Little did he know at the time, but Rose was on his way to setting a modern National League record.

He hit and hit and hit. Tommy Holmes' modern N.L. record of 37 games went by the boards.

44 straight games tied him with Wee Willie Keeler of the Baltimore Orioles who amassed his streak in the 1897 N.L. season when foul balls didn't count as strikes. Pete Rose was just 12 games shy of the impossible record.

Tuesday, August 1, in Atlanta, and Pete Rose was finally stopped. Rookie Larry McWilliams walked Rose in the 1st inning. In the 2nd, he drove a bolt through the box that McWilliams speared. In the 5th, he grounded to short. In the 7th against reliever Gene Garber, he drove a liner that third baseman Bob Horner picked off his navel.

Then, in the dramatic 9th, Garber fanned Rose on a charge-up to end it all.

After he had hit in his 43rd straight game (single off Larry Christenson), the colorful Rose declared, "If I get Keeler, I'm going after Sidney Stonestreet. Sidney had 48. I invented him. I need a closer goal than 56."

PETE'S A PHILLIE!

The 1978 season had ended and Pete Rose was going to be a free agent.

But, before Rose took off the Cincinnati uniform for the last time, he went with the Reds on a 17-game tour of Japan, delaying the negotiations of the teams interested in him.

He returned to the states in late November and jetted from Atlanta to Kansas City to St. Louis to Pittsburgh to Philadelphia visiting the five clubs who were seriously after the services of a future Hall of Famer.

The first Phillies offer was short but Ruly Carpenter, Bill Giles and Paul Owens got back in the picture again and on Dec. 5, Rose told a jam-packed press conference in Orlando, Fla., scene of baseball's winter meetings, that he had chosen to sign a four-year contract with the Phillies.

"Philadelphia's the place I always wanted to play. That was my first priority," said Pete. "I said all along I might take less money if I could go to a team where I'd be happy.

"All the offers were very similar but it came down to a decision of where I was gonna be the happiest. I've always enjoyed playing in Veterans Stadium. The fans support the team, they're alive. I like to play before 40,000 every day."

In his 16 years with the Reds, Rose compiled some pretty heavy hitting statistics. He's already set several records and is within reach of many more.

Now, Phillies fans will watch eagerly as Pete Rose climbs up the ladder of several all-time and National League rankings aiming to pass the likes of Honus Wagner, Stan Musial, Hank Aaron and many others.

Bowa's The Best!

The statistics are starting to show what Philadelphia baseball fans have known for a long time. Larry Bowa is the best fielding shortstop in baseball, and when he has finished playing the game he loves so much, he will go down in the record books as one of the greatest fielding shortstops of all time.

Bowa is beginning his tenth season in the major leagues, all with the Phillies. In that time he has set a major league record, Highest Fielding Percentage, Shortstop, Lifetime (minimum 1,000 games), .981.

In the nine years that he has been flagging down ground balls for the Phillies, Bowa has committed just 122 errors in 6,404 Total Chances which means that Larry Bowa makes an error once EVERY 535 chances. If that sounds impressive and almost impossible, it is!

Despite his impressive defensive stats, Bowa won only his second Gold Glove last year. Says the 33-year-old Sacramento, California native, "I've felt all along that I was the best defensive shortstop in baseball. The fact that I've won only two Gold Gloves has bothered me in the past, but I think people outside of Philadelphia are beginning to realize that I'm a pretty good fielder. I know I work as hard at my defense as anybody, and I'll keep trying to get better."

Last season might have been his finest defensive season ever as he made numerous spectacular plays plus all the routine ones. However, a series of unfortunate errors in September including one on his next to last chance of the season cost him a chance to tie his one season error and fielding percentage marks as he finished 1979 with 10 errors and a percentage of .986.

Five of those came in September and two in his first seven games of the season. In between, Larry committed just ONE error each May, July and August.

"Sure I wanted to break my own record but it just wasn't to be."

The Phillies' Gold Glovers

Defensive strength up the middle. That's one of the prerequisites of a championship club.

The 1979 Eastern Division champion Phillies set an all-time club record by committing just 104 errors in 162 games. The total led all major league teams as Baltimore had the best American League defense with 111 errors.

When THE SPORTING NEWS and Rawlings Sporting Goods Company announced their Gold Glove defensive team at the end of the season, the Phillies dominated the selections by placing four players on the National League nine.

The Phillies defensive strength up the middle was quite evident:

★ Centerfielder Garry Maddox, won his fourth straight Gold Glove.

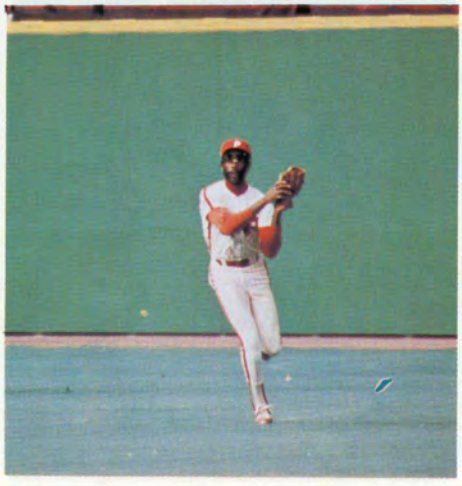
★ Third in a row for Mike Schmidt at third base.

★ Second ever for the best defensive shortstop ever, Larry Bowa.

★ A big first for Bob Boone, who bounced Johnny Bench of the Cincinnati Reds off the team for the first time in 11 years.

In placing four players on the prestigious team, the Phillies became only the second N. L. team to do so since Gold Glove teams were nominated for each league back in 1959.

The Cincinnati Reds with Bench, second baseman Joe Morgan, shortstop Dave Concepcion and outfielder Cesar Geronimo were on the team four straight years starting in 1974. In the American League, the 1960 Chicago White Sox had a quartet on the team, while the Baltimore Orioles also had four, five different years.



The Gold Glove team is selected by managers of the teams, club broadcasters and THE SPORTING NEWS correspondent from each club.
